NOTE ON THE ENTRIES IN THE CALENDAR.

Similar remarks to those made in the note on p. vii to the second volume apply to the third. The formal entries relating to admittances to and viewing of chambers have been omitted, and the regular entries which occur at certain intervals, such as allowances to watchmen and other officers of the Inn, the assessment of pensions, when single, and fines for non-attendance at vacations, have, as a rule, also been left out. Owing to the large increase in the amount of business, transacted principally at the Bench Table, towards the end of the seventeenth and during the eighteenth century, such matters, other than those before referred to, as are formal, both in the Acts of Parliament and Bench Table Orders, have been calendared as shortly as possible; at the same time everything of general interest has been abstracted fully. The headings to the minutes of the several Parliaments and Bench Tables which show the attendances, became so frequent and occupy so much space, that it has been thought it would meet all requirements to summarize the attendances at the beginning of each year, and this course has been adopted from the commencement of the reign of William and Mary (p. 259).

The accounts have been dealt with in the same manner as in the earlier volumes, the first account for each reign being abstracted fully, and some intermediate accounts being treated in a like way.

The Index and Glossary have been compiled upon the same principle as in the previous volumes.

WILLIAM PAGE.

INTRODUCTION.

CHARLES II

Vol. ii., p. 33:

THE Inner Temple, like other parts of the country, was well prepared for the restoration of the monarchy. Mr. Richard Goddard, a royalist, who had been elected treasurer in October, 1659, remained in office until the election of Sir Heneage Finch, the king's solicitor-general, in November, 1661. Barristers favourable to the royal cause were put on the bench, and serjeants-at-law were created. Those members of our society who were qualified took part in the coronation procession, and the usual bonfires attested the loyalty of the gentlemen of the inns of court. But the entire community was occupied with the change of government and its consequential difficulties. The disposal of the regicides, the disbanding of the army, the distribution of places, the reconstitution of the judicial benches, the re-establishment of the church, and the passage of the new prayer book through the house of commons were matters requiring not a few months for their elaboration and many more to carry them into effect, so that subjects of minor importance were treated as of no account. In other respects the current of the inn flowed on as before, and nothing of moment happened to trouble the peace of the inn until the outbreak of the plague in 1665.

In Michaelmas term, 1660, the new serjeants, of whom there were fourteen, comprising six from our inn, met in the Inner Temple hall and, after counting, went in procession to the court of common pleas, where they were received by the chancellor and the judges. A long and detailed account of the ceremony is given by Siderfin, who was present, and it is repeated by Foss.¹ It was similar to previous creations of serjeants, although, the number being larger, there was probably a greater attendance and more display.

On Thursday, the 15th of August, 1661, Sir Heneage Finch, Bart., solicitor-general, being reader of the inn, gave his feast in the antient hall. This, as it then stood, had a large window at the east end, to which light was admitted over a small low library, which occupied the ground between the hall and the new brick buildings. It also had short windows to the north, over some chambers of one story called Twisden's buildings, and long windows to the south, through which the light came without interruption. The eastern window was filled with large coats of arms, including those of Edward the Confessor, Queen Elizabeth, King James I., and numerous distinguished noblemen and chancellors. A list of these, some twenty-four in all, as they then existed, is given in Dugdale's "Origines Juridicales,"² Sir Thomas Littelton, K.B., the author of the "Tenures," being the only person, not a nobleman or a chancellor, honoured with a place in that window. In those on the north side were twelve coats, on the south were twenty coats—showing, as appears from old drawings, that the windows looking southward were nearly twice the depth of those looking towards the north.³ To this feast the king was bidden. He came in the royal barge from Whitehall accompanied by the Duke of York, the lord chancellor, various ministers of state, and a great number of the nobility. A portion of the retaining wall being removed to provide a landing stage for the royal party, the king and his company landed from the river in the Inner Temple garden, where they were received by the reader and by Sir Orlando Bridgman, a former member of the inn, but now chief justice of the common pleas, in his robes of office and his collar of SS. The following description is given by Dugdale, garter king-at-arms, who was probably present on the occasion :

“On each side as his majesty passed stood the reader’s servants in scarlet cloaks and white tabba doublets ; there being a way made through the wall into the Temple Garden, and above them on each side the benchers, baristers and other gentlemen of the society, all in their gowns and formalities the loud music playing from the time of his landing till he entred the hall ; where he was received with xx violins, which continued as long as his majesty stayed. Dinner was brought up by fifty select gentlemen of the society in their gowns who gave their attendance all dinner while, none other appearing in the hall but themselves ; the King and the Duke of York sitting under a canopy of state at a table set at the upper end of the hall, advanced three steps above the rest. The Lord Chancellor with the rest of the noblemen sitting at a long table on the right side of the hall ; and the reader with those of the society on the other side.”¹

After the dinner the Duke of York, the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Dorset and Secretary Morris were admitted members of the society. At the first ensuing parliament, viz. : on 3rd November, 1661, the Duke of York was by special order called to the bar and also to the bench, and an order was made that his arms be set up in the eastern window of the hall. A transcript of the order calling the duke to the bench was framed and glazed and, until a comparatively recent date, was still to be seen in the parliament chamber.²

In 1671 the king and the duke again honoured the treasurer with their presence on Candlemass day, on which occasion the hall was again arranged for their reception, and a performance of “The Committee,” a comedy by Sir R. Howard, was given for their entertainment by the players of the king’s house. The reader’s feast of 1661 was the last of the great entertainments chronicled by Dugdale or by any later historian. Other festivities were honoured by the presence of kings, queens, and great officers of state, but they were of a more modern type and were wanting in those picturesque details which delight the artist and the antiquary. p. 81

the object of reducing the cost of entertainments, so that members might not, by fear of the necessary expense, be hindered taking the post of reader. To prevent possible disorders at Christmas the commons were dissolved from S. Thomas' day to Epiphany, and the penalty of expulsion from chambers was added to other punishments incurred by disorderly conduct. In February, 1663-4, an order was made as to moots. In June, 1664, an order in council was issued to all the inns of court and of chancery nearly identical with that promulgated by King James in November, 1614. It was signed by the chancellor (Clarendon), by the chief justice, the chief baron, and other judges, and among other details it defined once more the respective positions of the barrister and the attorney-at-law, and declared that from henceforth no common attorney or solicitor, "they being ministerial persons of an inferior nature," should be admitted to any of the four houses of court, though they might be admitted, as before, to the inns of chancery.

The plague, which had for many years periodically visited the Temple, found the lawyers as ready as ever to deal with its advance by flying from its contagion. This was the time-honoured and generally successful plan adopted by the inn. On notice of any case of suspicious sickness within the society, commons, moots, and readings were postponed, and the inhabitants betook themselves to the country homes of their parents or their friends. The great scourge of 1665 accordingly found the Temples deserted, and beyond the notices of adjournment in the summers of 1665 and 1666 no record of those dismal months appears in our books.¹ The great fire which occurred in the following year was a matter of far greater concern. It found us entirely unprepared. No appliances for dealing with an extensive fire seem to have been anywhere provided or even understood. Although the inn was well supplied with water from the New River and an unlimited quantity was procurable from the Thames, yet there were no means at hand to turn the flow of water on to the burning piles. The fire commenced about two o'clock in the morning of Sunday, 2nd September, 1666. A north-easterly wind was then blowing and the flames were thus rapidly carried towards the west. During the whole of Sunday and Monday the fire raged through the city, skirting the river-banks to the south-west and reaching Holborn to the north. On Tuesday the 4th it had arrived at Whitefriars, on the eastern boundary of the Inner Temple. Fleet Street, Ludgate Hill, and Fetter Lane were in flames, and it seemed that nothing could save the inn with its venerable church. During the night, however, the wind fell, and with it the great onward force of the fire slackened, so that on Wednesday, the 5th, hopes were entertained of saving the western suburbs of the city.

The solidity of the brick building recently erected in King's Bench Walk gave a temporary check to the advance of the fire, and the judicious use of gunpowder within our walls, by making open spaces, hindered the further progress of the flames. Thus, though a great portion of the inn was destroyed, yet the fire was stayed at the confines of the church, and the flames which had swallowed up the cathedral of King Ethelbert, spared the chapel of the knights templars. On Thursday evening, the 6th, the fire broke out again in the Inner Temple owing, as was supposed, to some sparks falling upon a pile of wooden buildings. But the templars with their servants, acting under the orders of the Duke of York,¹ a bencher of the inn, who remained all night and personally superintended the operations, succeeded before morning, by the free use of gunpowder, in stopping the progress of the flames and saving the inn from further destruction. In this they were also aided by the soldiers who had been sent to the city to assist in dealing with the fire, by the sailors from the fleet, and by four engineers whom the benchers employed to aid in the demolition of buildings within the inn. The exact amount of injury done to the Temple is not easily ascertained. A map in the possession of the society has a line drawn across it showing the limits of the fire, and the investigations which I have been able to make into this subject show the line to be substantially accurate. According to this map, which was published by John Ogilby in 1677, the whole of what is now known as King's Bench Walk, the Alienation buildings, Mitre Court buildings, Tanfield Court, a block corresponding with and then known as Lamb buildings, the whole of the buildings upon the area now covered by the library, the class rooms and the parliament chamber with the offices below, were consumed by the fire. The church appears to have been nearly touched at the south-eastern corner, but in other respects to have been saved by reason of its open position, although it was dangerously surrounded by small shops built up against its southern and western walls. All the houses from the north of the churchyard and from King's Bench Walk to Fleet Street, including Ram Alley, Mitre Court, and Serjeant's Inn, were burnt to the ground, but the Inner Temple Lane, the gateway built in the time of King James I., and the buildings immediately abutting upon it seem to have escaped. Fig Tree Court does not appear to have come under the direct influence of the fire. It was probably burnt or partially blown up during the Wednesday or the Thursday night when the fire broke out again in the Temple. The object in blowing up this portion of Fig Tree Court would have been to save the antient hall and the cloisters which communicated with the church in the preservation of which both societies were jointly interested. The entries in the records corroborate the line of Ogilby's map, and show that the following buildings were undoubtedly destroyed :

- p. 43 King's Bench Walk, including the Crown Office, the King's Bench Office, and the small lodges adjoining the river.
- p. 50 The Alienation Office in its large garden and the Exchequer Office.
The buildings by Ram Alley (formerly called Fuller's Rents) at the top of King's Bench Walk and the Alienation garden.
- p. 42 Tanfield Court.
- p. 44 The Master's house, which stood to the north of the church and of Tanfield Court.
The whole or the greater part of Fig Tree Court.
- p. 43 The end of the Inner Temple hall was burnt and narrowly escaped destruction.

It is probable also that much damage was done which is included under the headings of repairs, rebuildings of staircases, and similar entries. The Middle Temple, including the cloisters, was not touched by fire upon this occasion, unless it may have been affected by the partial destruction of Fig Tree Court. Old Paper Buildings, the subject of much discussion in previous reigns, with their gravel court yards and their galleries looking into the garden where Selden and his friends congregated, were left intact, though the trees under which the templars were wont to walk must have suffered considerably. Serjeants Inn in Fleet Street, the principal home of the serjeants and the judges, which stood in a garden adjoining the Inner Temple was, with its hall, its chapel and its kitchen, burnt to the ground. According to Dugdale¹ the windows of the hall or refectory of the serjeants contained, in 1664, as many as forty-three coats of arms of fellows of the inn. The chapel, in its south window, also had one coat, that of Serjeant Bedlowes, who died in 1596. The hall was rebuilt at the cost of the then fellows of the inn, but the judges and serjeants thenceforward mainly used the smaller and more modern Serjeants Inn in Chancery Lane.

The gateway, at the entrance to Inner Temple lane, had been rebuilt in 1610 by John Bennet, one of the king's sergeants at arms, who had received his appointment on the 14th of July, 1609.² It was surmounted by a handsomely decorated house projecting slightly into Fleet Street. It contained three stories of rooms, one of which was and still is decorated with the badge and cypher of Henry Prince of Wales, eldest son of King James, who died in November, 1612. The second and third floors projected each beyond the other, and the first and second had large bay windows facing the street. The exterior was decorated with the Prince of Wales' feathers and other emblems. On the third or upper story, was a gallery from which the household could, on occasions, assemble to witness the various processions entering and leaving the city. Behind this gallery were the upper rooms of the house, surmounted by two gables, one immediately over the gateway and one towards the east. The space occupied by our gateway was about half the breadth of the house, to which the entrance was through a door to the east. It was called the Prince's Arms, a name which it retained for many generations.³ S. Dunstan's church and two or three houses to the eastward on either side of the road were all in Fleet Street that survived the great fire. Of the buildings, except the church, now to be found in the Inner Temple, this gateway and certain work connected with the

- p. 23 the two societies, concurring in that sentiment, resolved in May, 1664, that, upon his building such a house in the garden at the east end of the church, he should have the exclusive use of the same so long as he remained master of the Temple. The benchers of the Inner Temple

On the 28th October, 1666, the benchers commenced proceedings for the reconstruction of the inn. They appointed a committee of nine of their number "to consider of the new buildings to be erected in the house and to take into consideration all the circumstances touching the same." On the 30th November a committee of seven with a quorum of three was appointed "to treat with any persons and to settle all matters in reference to the rebuilding of the society," and leave was given for the immediate commencement of a portion of Tanfield Court and of certain chambers in Fig Tree Court. On the 27th January, 1666-7, an agreement was made with Francis Phelips, a bencher, for the rebuilding of "those chambers and rooms called King's Bench building, lately consumed by fire." This sets out certain conditions upon which the chambers throughout the inn were rebuilt by its members. Phelips was to erect these buildings, at his own cost, and not to be liable to the society for any fine in entering upon them. He, his executors and assigns, were to have a grant of the chambers, when built, for three consecutive lives, with power during that period to admit thereto, and to receive payment of fines for admission, from any persons who were members of the inn. The houses were to be four stories high. The former occupants of chambers were to have a preferential right of admission, and the masters of the crown and of the king's bench offices were to have a right to a treaty with Phelips for the re-erection of their respective offices. In the following February an arrangement was made with Dr. Ball, by which he undertook to lay out £400 in the rebuilding of his house, which had been burnt down. He was to build in brick, and, in consideration thereof, was to have a lease for thirty-one years commencing from his death or his ceasing to be master. He, or his executors, were on the commencement of such thirty-one years to offer the house to the two inns at a rental of £40 a year for the whole time. If they declined, then he or his executors were to offer it to the master for the time being for £40 a year, and if he declined then he or they were to be at liberty to let it to any member or members of either inn at such rents as might be agreed. The rebuilding of the chambers by Ram Alley was undertaken by some members of the society in the spring of 1667. Ram Alley itself was also rebuilt, and those interested in the subject will find the Ram Alley of the restoration under the name of Hare Place. It is entered from Fleet Street between the gateway of Serjeant's Inn and the Mitre Tavern. There is no longer any entrance from Ram Alley to the Temple. Mitre Court and the Mitre Tavern were also rebuilt, and the gate into Mitre Court, as to which frequent orders may be found in the earlier volumes of these records, was re-erected, and is still closed at night and opened in the morning. The Alienation office, with its sets of chambers looking into the Alienation garden, was rebuilt by the crown, and in consideration thereof the king and his successors had the right to admit to such chambers any member of the inn without fees to the society for such admission.

Arrangements similar to those with Mr. Phelips were made with any members of the inn who desired to rebuild the chambers which they had occupied, and among others Roger Twisden, son of the judge, was licensed to build on the north side of the hall and to have a lease for two lives. A stipulation was, however, inserted that he should put a leaden roof. Other members, all "burnt interest persons," undertook the building of chambers in continuation of those erected by Mr. Phelips in King's Bench Walk. The certificates as to the foundations for these buildings bear the name of Christopher Wren. In respect of this matter he appears to have received, as surveyor-general, a fee of £5. Generally it may be said that any members of the society who lost their chambers by the fire were enabled to rebuild, at their own cost, on the same advantageous terms as were granted to Mr. Phelips and others. The library and a moot chamber under it, at the east end of the hall, were rebuilt by the society during the year 1667 at the cost of £430. They were painted at a cost of £32 15s. and were wainscotted at a cost of £136. Towards this expense of £598 15s. Sir Heneage Finch contributed the sum of £150, a memorandum of which generous gift was duly entered on the minutes of February, 1668-9. After this "Samuel Walker, painter and herald," was commissioned to paint for the library the escutcheons of past readers at 3s. each. Those of new readers were to be paid for at the rate of 5s. each. For this work he received in all £28 7s. od., the price of the arms of 189 past readers at 3s. each, and in the following year he put up the arms of six recent readers at the price of 30s. The rebuilding of the inn was thus energetically taken in hand and rapidly completed, so that in February, 1671, the treasurer was able to show to the king and his brother a new temple raised upon the ashes of the old domain.

During the period of trouble immediately following the great fire, London was thrown into a panic by the appearance of the dutch fleet in the Thames. Our two great warships the "Royal Charles" and the "Royal James," were burnt, and the city was threatened with a blockade. Accounts of the popular feeling at that time are given by Pepys,¹ by Evelyn,² and by Macaulay.³ The town lay helplessly at the mercy of the enemy, and probably our society did all that was practicable or even possible when they appointed two of their servants to keep a good look out "at the time when the Dutch fleet came into the River." The enemy dictated their own conditions of peace, and the nation was fain to submit to the defeat and indignity as one of the penalties for a restoration of the Stuarts. But the business of rebuilding their city still occupied the minds of the people, and disregarding for the moment the foreign intrigues of their rulers and the disasters to the fleet, they devoted their energies to the accomplishment of this great object. Thus in the course of some four or five years from the date of the great fire the Inner Temple was rebuilt, and the students and barristers of the society were re-established in their homes under sounder, healthier, and more commodious conditions.

In the spring of 1668-9, one of our periodical contests with the city broke out, and this introduces us to George Jeffryes, then recently called to be a barrister of our society. The Temples had from the earliest times declared themselves to be extra parochial and beyond the jurisdiction of the city authorities, while the latter claimed that the Temples were within the suburbs of the city lying outside the city walls. The subject had been discussed under the commonwealth, when it was held that the Temples were not for any purpose, either of assessment or otherwise, within the jurisdiction of the city of London. The templars also contended that the lord mayor had no right, as lord mayor, to bear up his sword within their confines, and thus assume a jurisdiction equivalent to a royal control over them and their society. On this occasion the lord mayor, Sir William

Turner, had agreed to dine with Mr. Goodfellow, the reader of the Inner Temple, who was about to be created a serjeant at law, and the dinner was fixed for Wednesday, 3rd March, 1668-9. The lord mayor had somehow communicated to the reader his intention of coming in state, with his officers, and of bearing up his sword through the inn and within the hall. Upon this being known the whole society protested, and the reader sent two of the fellows, Thomas Wroth and George Jeffryes to see his lordship and endeavour to accommodate matters. These two gentlemen had an interview with the lord mayor and the aldermen, and pointed out to them that the members of the inn were satisfied that, by law and by precedent, the lord mayor was not entitled to bear up his sword within the Temple, and that they were determined to insist on their rights. If, however, the mayor would accommodate them as to this particular ceremony, he would be received with every mark of cordiality and respect. The mayor then said he would not come at all, but being further pressed by Mr. Jeffryes with personal compliments, hoping thus to come to some agreement, the lord mayor retired to consult with the aldermen. On his return he sent a message to the reader "I will come and dine with him. I will bear up my sword and see who dares to take it down." This challenge to the inn was promptly accepted. In the afternoon of this same day, the lord mayor with the sheriffs and a retinue of officers, came to the Inner Temple, entering through the Inner Temple lane. As the party entered the cloisters they were met by the barristers and students of the inn, who informed the lord mayor that unless he lowered his sword he would not be permitted to enter the hall.¹ On his approaching the hall he found "the great staircase of the hall" thronged with gentlemen and students, some of whom carried their swords under their gowns, determined to maintain the hall against any attempt to enter it by force, and crying out to beat down the sword "in a very loud and rude manner." Upon the mayor still persisting, a rush was made for the sword. It was not captured, but the sword bearer was bruised, and some of the pearls from the scabbard were knocked off in the scuffle. The cap of maintenance was partly pulled off, and some of the city marshal's men, having affronted the gentlemen, they were carried off to be put under the pump, "but were not pumped." The students, however, took away the officers' sticks, and beat them with their own weapons. In the result the lord mayor with his retinue took shelter in the chambers of auditor Phillips. Meanwhile the sheriffs, with Sir John Nicholas the recorder, had gone to Whitehall to see the king, who appears to have advised the lord mayor to return to the city. This he attempted to do, but the templars, headed by Mr. Hodges, son of a deceased alderman, and by some other hot-headed youths, assailed his lordship, calling him "Mr. Mayor," and abused the sheriffs in remarkably scurrilous and threatening language. They also beat some of the aldermen and one of the sheriffs, distributed black eyes among the servants, and refused to allow the mayor to depart, if he insisted on bearing up his sword, except by way of Ram Alley, this being regarded as the back door of the inn. The mayor and his party were thus driven back to Mr. Phillips' chambers, and the benchers then interposed. They obtained an undertaking from the gentlemen that the mayor should be allowed to depart without molestation. This he did, though he was accompanied to the gate by the fellows of the inn shouting and jeering at the city party.

This is the account given by the witnesses on behalf of the city. Numerous depositions were also made by members of the inn,¹ but although they do not fully admit the scurrilous language attributed to them by the city officers, there is no substantial dispute as to the facts of the encounter. "A hall—a hall," was the battle cry of the templars, and to that cry the society assembled in great numbers, and seem to have resented very deeply the action of the lord mayor and the sheriffs. On the 21st of March an order was made for the attendance before the king in council of Sir John Nicholas, the recorder, and certain of the aldermen along with Hodges, Morgan, Pettus, Jeffryes, Litelton, Shaw, Wyn, and Bates, gentlemen of the Inner Temple who had been more or less concerned in the uproar.² On the 24th of March, Hodges, Wyn and Mundy were sent for again, and affidavits were read. the Temple was submitted to the privy council, the king himself being present, by Sir Heneage Finch (afterwards Lord Nottingham),¹ App., p. 443 treasurer of the inn. He contended that the Temple was exempted from the jurisdiction of the mayor and aldermen of the city, and had been so from the earliest period. That on the dissolution of the monasteries, the crown held it as a separate franchise, and that the patent of 6 Jac. I., conveyed the soil to the benchers with general words which revived and continued all the antient privileges. That even under the commonwealth the city was not permitted to exercise any kind of authority in the Temple, although the city was much Vol. ii., pp. 371-37² courted by the army and the government of that day. That the city charter was fourteen days later in date than the patent of the Temple, and moreover that whereas certain antient exempted monasteries, e.g., Whitefriars, Blackfriars and Smithfield, were added to the city jurisdiction by express words, there were no such words in regard of the Temple, which therefore retained its exemption as against the city. He argued at some length that the inconveniences to the Temple in being under the city would be insupportable, whereas no inconvenience would be suffered by the city if the exemption were upheld. The heads of his argument are very clearly stated in his memorandum, and they seem to have produced a good effect. The council were not prepared to decide against the Temple, nor to punish any of the gentlemen, and on the 7th April, p. 68 1669, they made an order that the king's pleasure in the matter be suspended till the rights and privileges of the Temple had been tried before the courts. This put the city to bring an action against the benchers, to have it declared that the Temple was within their jurisdiction. But no such action was ever brought, and although in January, 1678-9, when the lord mayor and sheriffs, again attempting to bear up the city sword within the precincts of the Temple, were treated with even more violence than in 1669, no steps were taken, and no attempt, I believe, was ever made to enforce the claim. Pepys² refers to this scene in the Temple of which he gives the same account, but adds that Sir Richard Browne caused the drums to beat for the train-bands, in answer to which the students threatened to try the charter of the city. On the 7th of April, Pepys went to the council chamber,¹ and heard the complaint of the city tried against the gentlemen of the Temple for a riot when the lord mayor was there :

“But, upon hearing the whole business the city was certainly to blame to charge them in this manner with a riot: but the king and council did forbear to determine anything in it till the other business of the title and privilege be decided, which is now under dispute between them, whether the Temple be within the liberty of the city or no. But I was sorry to see the city so ill-advised as to complain in a thing where their proofs were so weak.”

This incident is also referred to in the New View of London,² where the conduct of the lord mayor is spoken of as an insult to the gentlemen of the Inner Temple. The preparation of our case was entrusted to William Petyt, exigenter of London, a great benefactor to our society in later years, who in February, 1670-1, was “called to the bar and to be an utter barrister of this house, for his services done in asserting and defending the rights and privileges of the Temple.” p. 74

The fee farm rent of £10 per annum due from each of the Temples to the crown, under the patent of 6 Jac. I., was regularly paid into the exchequer. The receipt for this sum was taken by tally, according to the antient practice of that office. In November, 1668, it was notified to the inn that this fee farm rent had become part of Queen Catherine's jointure, and an order was made that for the future the same should be paid to Mr. Watts, her majesty's receiver. In the spring of 1673 communications were opened with the societies through the medium of John Lindsay, a banker in London, for the purchase by them of this rent, subject to the payment of the queen's jointure. A committee was appointed consisting of the treasurer and one benchman of each inn with power to treat, and an agreement was arranged in February, 1675-6, with the trustees for the sale of the crown fee farm rents, by which each inn purchased in perpetuity the fee farm rent of £10 per annum, subject to the queen's life interest therein. The price, viz., £80, was by no means unduly favourable to the crown, and was probably induced by his majesty's necessities. The annuity was duly paid until the death p. 52 p. 92 p. 108 p. 109

p. 92 On the 13th of June, 1673, what now appears a very retrograde movement was made in the private affairs of the society. It was then ordered "that the three junior butlers do by the beginning of Michaelmas term write a court-hand, and also know the antient and accustomed way of casting up accounts by counters," under penalty of losing their places as butlers. For many years past private and business letters, the correspondence of statesmen, and documents of every description, except those of a legal character, had been written in the ordinary hand then in use, a hand not greatly differing from that of the eighteenth century, and for a period of nearly twenty-five years what is known as the "court-hand" had disappeared even from the records of courts of justice.¹ It is not known precisely when the "court-hand" first came into general use. It appears to have been a continuation of the old norman system of characters introduced by William I., which had become gradually deteriorated as years rolled on. I think there is evidence that the court-hand became one of the recognized systems for public writings during the reign of Richard II. By the time of Elizabeth it had ceased to be invariably used, and the mixture of the court and the ordinary hand frequently gives rise to difficulty in deciphering writings of the sixteenth century.² In its place an ordinary legible hand had been substituted, and an inspection of our books will show the advantage which the use of the ordinary text was to both writers and readers. Persons familiar with the "court-hand" must have been few, and one fails to discern what advantage could have been anticipated by its continuance or revival. The "antient and accustomed way" of casting up accounts was that practised in the exchequer, the great tax collector and accountant of the nation. The "way" was antient enough, for its practice of accounting and discharging by counters and tallies was, according to Madox,³ at least as old as the reign of William Rufus. In this way every payment to the crown was made and every receipt was given, and it is fair to our predecessors to say that this process of accounting and discharging commended itself so much to successive governments that it continued in force, in regard to crown accounts, until 1834. An accumulation of tallies, at that time, caught fire and burnt down the houses of parliament. After this the mode of computation by counters on a chess board, and of discharge by notches in a stick, was recognized as too antiquated for the nineteenth century, and came to an end.¹ How long this system of accounts was retained in the Temple is doubtful. The court-hand continued to be employed for entering the admissions of students and sometimes for the acts of parliament, but in other respects the ordinary hand quickly superseded the antient use.²

Sometime in the month of October, 1677, a fire broke out in the Inner Temple. Its origin is nowhere stated, but it was of a serious character, involving the rebuilding of nearly the whole of King's Bench Walk. Between the dates of these two fires (1666 and 1677) considerable advance, as will be seen, had been made in the appliances for the prevention and extinction of fire. The only precautions that appear from the records to have been taken before the great fire are as follows. In November, 1604, an old order for providing leather buckets in case of fire, apparently in reference to Ram Alley, was renewed. In November, 1650, it was "ordered that any fellow admitted to or using any chamber or room shall take care that the chimney therein be swept and the fire within the same room be safely kept, under pain of £5 for every neglect therein or every time such chimney shall happen to be on fire." I find, also, several entries for "mending the engine." In 1649, 15*s.* In 1654, £1 15*s.* 0*d.* In 1657-8 it was twice mended, once for £1 13*s.* 0*d.*, and again for 7*s.* In 1656-7 Stephen Cressar, the joiner, received £10 7*s.* 7*d.* for making a house for the engine. It is not stated what this engine was, and there is no reason to suppose that it was a fire engine as such a machine is understood at the present day. In an account of the fires of London given by Mr. Knight,³ in his history of London, he is of opinion, I think correctly, that a fire engine which pumped a continuous flow of water was not known in London until long after the date of the great fire.

“How our ancestors endeavoured to extinguish fires we can only guess from the nature of things. Buckets of water would be brought and thrown upon the flaming materials by the bystanders, or the thatch of a cottage would be pulled down, or one group of houses would be allowed to burn itself out, and others would be tended for. After a time when the ingenuity of machinists enabled men to use some more effective means than mere buckets of water, a kind of syringe or squirt was employed, which seems to have been the first rudiment of a fire-engine known in England. Numbers of these were kept by the parochial authorities, as the small fire-engines now are. Their construction was very simple. Each squirt was about three feet in length, with an aperture at the lower end about half an inch in diameter and a capacity of about half a gallon. It had a handle on each side, and was worked by three men, thus:—two men held the squirt by the handles and the nozzle, while a third worked a piston within it in the manner of a syringe: the aperture was held downwards in a vessel of water while the squirt was being filled; and when filled the nozzle was directed upwards, and the stream of water directed on the burning materials by the working of the piston.”

In a history of the monument, by Mr. C. Welch, F.S.A., librarian to the corporation of London,¹ it is stated that the engines in use at the time of the fire were “brass hand-squirts.” In the Guildhall museum are three of these engines, one belonging to the ward of Aldgate in 1672, one to the parish of S. Dionis Backchurch, and one used at the Guildhall in 1687. In the act for preventing and suppressing fires in London, passed in 1668,² frequent reference is made to the provision of hand-squirts of brass, and among other requirements each of the twelve great companies is to supply 30 buckets, 1 engine and 2 hand-squirts of brass, every alderman who has been sheriff is to provide himself with 24 buckets and 1 brass hand-squirt. The “engine” is left undescribed. It was probably some contrivance for the carriage or reception of water, to be projected on to the flames by means of these brass hand-squirts. A manual engine throwing a continuous stream of water and worked by several men, seems to have been the invention of Hautsch, of Nuremberg, in 1657. The adaptation to such a machine of the flexible hose was the work of Vanderheyde, of Amsterdam, about 1672, and it was shortly afterwards adopted in Paris. It is doubtful when engines of this description were introduced into England. The first representation of a fire under the influence of such engines is to be found in an engraving of the time of William and Mary.¹ It shows the inventions of J. Lofting,² a dutchman, who obtained a patent in London for the manufacture of fire engines and was, probably, the first person to introduce the modern system into use in this country. It has the flexible hose and the air chamber, and is worked as a manual engine of the present day. Within a very few years after the great fire, however, a fire engine of some description became known in London as a possible aid in extinguishing fire, and it was adopted by the city. The inn, appreciating the value of such an appliance, secured a machine described as a "water engine," which was kept in a shed near the King's Bench office. A system was also organized by which leathern buckets were kept in the hall, in readiness to be passed by hand when the alarm of fire was given. p. 122

S. Bride's and S. Dunstan's³ parishes also provided themselves with engines which were brought into the Temple in 1677 and assisted in subduing the flames. The charges for payment of the men who worked at the engine from S. Dunstan's, suggest that it was probably of a similar construction to that described by Fairholt. This consisted of a large tank, four or five feet in height, on low wheels with a platform on which a man could stand. The tank or engine being drawn to the fire, was filled with water brought in buckets. Several men, working a manual, forced the water from the tank through the squirt, which was directed by the man on the platform. There was no air chamber and no continuous flow, nor was there any flexible hose then in use. In October, 1676, a committee of the bench had been appointed "to consider all necessary means to prevent any accidental fires in this society, and to view the engine, and to report what further number of buckets will be necessary to be added to the former, now hung up in the hall." The second fire, therefore, did not find the inn altogether unprepared, and it was probably owing to this circum- p. 114

Early in November, 1677, within a month after the fire, a committee was appointed to draw up an act for the rebuilding of the burnt premises and to compensate and arrange with the "burnt interest" persons under the late fire. The arrangements made with the members of the inn were on the same scale as those after the great fire. The houses to be rebuilt in King's Bench Walk were to comprise cellars or basement, chambers on the ground floor and three pairs of stairs and no more above the ground floor chambers. They were to be 38 feet in depth, with a brick wall not less than 6 feet in height next to Whitefriars, and a space was to be left between the wall and the buildings. Each builder was to have two consecutive lives and an assignment for one life by his executors, in consideration of his building. He was also to be at liberty to make a way through the Temple wall to the river, so as to bring the necessary building material by water, and to be allowed to mix mortar and to store plant on the Temple land. Before commencing operations, however, he was to deposit in respect of each chamber the sum of £50 with "Mr. Blanchard, goldsmith, near Temple Bar."¹

¹ This gentleman lived at the sign of The Marygold, No. 1 Fleet Street. He was afterwards partner with Mr. Child who founded Child's bank. "Signs of old Fleet Street to the end of the XVIII. Century," by F. G. Hilton Price, Dir: S. A. "Archæological Journal," 1896, p. 353.

The King's Bench office, which was burnt down with the rest of King's Bench Walk, was rebuilt under an arrangement with Mr. Livesay by which he was paid £120 for his interest and materials in the office, and the inn took over the reconstruction. The office was to be built over four sets of chambers on the ground floor, with one chimney in each, to be 80 feet in length, 30 feet in breadth, and 11 feet in height between the floor and the ceiling. It was to be covered with lead, and to be subject to an agreement by which the occupants were not to burn any sea coal or other fuel or firing "saving only charcoal and billets." A computation, made by the treasurer and the surveyor, suggested that if each occupant of the four ground chambers paid £80 for a life, the inn might be fairly reimbursed their outlay. Under these circumstances the new King's Bench Office was built "one storey high as the Exchequer Office." A very considerable portion of the King's Bench buildings must have been destroyed, as among other "burnt interest persons" are some claiming in respect of houses on either side of the entrance from the Temple to Whitefriars. Leave was also given to Minors, the head butler, to build a cellar and three stories over it at the end of Hampson's buildings, which is also described as "the southernmost staircase in King's Bench buildings." The rebuilding of King's Bench Walk suggested that of Paper Buildings, and a proposal to this effect was under the consideration of the bench when the next disastrous fire occurred. On No. 4 King's Bench Walk a stone tablet commemorates the destruction and the rebuilding of King's Bench Walk in these words:

"CONFLAGRATAM AN^o. 1677. FABRICATAM AN^o. 1678. RICHARDO POWELL ARMIGER THESAURAR."

Scarcely was the rebuilding of King's Bench Walk accomplished than a fire broke out in the Middle Temple, from which our predecessors narrowly escaped the calamity of being once more driven from their homes. An account of this fire and of the circumstances under which it arose is given by Roger North, a member of the Middle Temple, who at that date was inhabiting a set of chambers in Brick Court.¹ About 10 p.m. on Sunday, 26th January, 1678-9, smoke was seen to be coming from the chambers of Mr.

Thornbury in Pump Court. The fire was caused by a flaming lump of sea coal falling from the grate on to the deal boards next the hearth, no one being in the chambers at the time. Thus started, it burned furiously, for there was a hard frost of greater duration and severity than had been known for years. The Thames and the flow from the conduits were frozen so that the engines could not work, and water could only be obtained by passing it in buckets from hand to hand. Even this was not accomplished without difficulty, for it froze in the transit. The house where the fire commenced being an old building, the walls being wainscotted with oak, and there being many deal partitions, it burned like a barrel of pitch, and the whole of that side of Pump Court was soon ablaze. The wind carried the fire up Middle Temple Lane towards Fleet Street, encountering and burning certain chambers described as "a sort of paper buildings" abutting on the lane. Part of Brick Court to the west of the lane and part of Hare Court to the east, the latter being the property of the Inner Temple, were also burnt. Proceeding on its way, the fire consumed the rest of Pump Court, a great part of Elm Tree Court and Vine Court, which was situate between Pump Court and the cloisters. Fig Tree Court was also partially consumed. In order to save the Middle Temple hall attempts were made to blow up the houses at the corner of Elm Tree Court, but the fabric being strong and well-built, the gunpowder had no appreciable effect, and the fire was ultimately stayed at that corner by the solid masonry of those very buildings. To save the shops in Fleet Street a house was blown up in Hare Court, where the officials of the fine office kept their records. This was done with so great haste that they were unable to remove their documents, and an act of parliament was subsequently obtained to supply the loss that was thus sustained. The fire now approached the outer walls of the church. Some houses were then blown up and the shops against the church were pulled down, with the result that the fabric of the church escaped with a slight injury to the roof of the round. Thus, for the second time, was the progress of the fire arrested at the portal of the church. As in 1666 the east or, as Dryden called it, "the hostile Belgian wind," carried the flames to the eastern end of the church and there spent its fury, so in 1679 a wind from the west carried the fatal fire over our houses and lanes, and having laid desolate the templars' dwellings to the west of the church, stayed its destructive progress at the church itself.

The cloisters were burnt down and the Inner Temple hall was in great danger. The latter was, however, protected by the solid masonry which is still to be seen in the buttery, in the offices, and at the western end of the hall. It was thus saved, although it was once partially on fire. Beyond the hall were the new buildings of four stories, erected after the fire of 1666, and between them and the eastern end of the hall was a small library of one story under the eastern window of the hall. This the persons engaged in dealing with the fire somewhat unnecessarily blew up. Having put too little powder for the substantial building in Elm Court, they used so much for this little library that the explosion scattered the timbers in all directions, wounding several persons and endangering the lives of many others. The linen and books, however, had been previously removed. It would have been, as it was said, as useful to blow up London bridge as this little room, for even had it caught alight, it could have done no harm, as the brick and stone buildings on either side were safe from any danger of fire. A map in the possession of the Inner Temple portrays the inn "as it was in 1671, when the king and the duke of York dined with the treasurer, Sir Heneage Finch." It shows the little library at the east end of the hall, being a building of one story with the eastern window of the hall above it. In Ireland's "Inns of Court"¹ a sketch is given of the hall and the library to the east as they stood at the end of the last century. The fire lasted from eleven on Sunday night to noon on Monday, and left open an area of great extent, "bounded by the Middle Temple hall and part of Elm Court southward, the Palgrave buildings in Old Essex Court westward, the taverns and Hare Court northward, and the church and Inner Temple buildings eastward, all which places lay in view of one another,"² so that a person standing on the steps of the Middle Temple hall had an uninterrupted view of the side of the Devil tavern to the west, and of the Rainbow to the north of Hare Court, of the entrance to the church, and of Lamb building in Tanfield Court. In the course of this night the lord mayor, accompanied by the sheriffs, came in state about midnight to visit the fire, but the gentlemen of the Inner Temple, asserting their privileges, refused to admit him so long as he bore up his sword, and ultimately drove him out. "At this he went over the way to a tavern, where some say he first got drunk and then returned, dismissing the engines he met coming from the city."¹ The Earl of Craven, the Earl of Faversham, some officers of the guards, and the Duke of Monmouth, who was then courting popularity, were also among the visitors, and rendered assistance in quenching the fire. Lord Faversham, being too eager to help, narrowly escaped being blown up with the records of the fine office in Hare Court, and received a severe wound in the head from a falling beam. John Crosse, the brewer of the society, was also a sufferer. His brewery was at the western end of the hall, and he there lost beer to the value of £20, which went to supply the engine in default of water, and for which he was not compensated until May, 1684.²

The success and the general content which followed the rebuilding of the Inner Temple after the great fire, were hardly attained by the Middle in their trouble. At the time of the fire in 1678-9, there was much friction between the gentlemen of the Middle inn and their benchers. Both inns suffered at this time from the vagaries of the students at their Christmas festivities, although, as the benchers of the Middle took the matter more seriously than those of the Inner, the trouble was at that time less pronounced with us than with them. To such an extent had this arisen, that at a meeting at Serjeant's Inn after Christmas, 1678, the benchers of the Middle Temple were obliged to invoke the assistance of the judges in order to obtain a hearing. The whole society was in open rebellion, and the mediation of the judges only obtained a delay with a view to an accommodation. In the meanwhile the fire came and found two hostile camps. It was thus some time before any general agreement could be arrived at as

² "The Thames being frozen, there was great scarcity of water, it being so bitter a frost, the water hung in isecles at the eves of the houses. The engine plaid away many barrels of beer to stop the fire: but the chief way of stopping the fire was by blowing up houses: in doing which many were hurt, particularly the Earl of Faversham, whose skull was almost broken: but he is now in some hopes of recovery."—"A Brief Historical Relation of State Affairs." to a scheme for rebuilding. This was ultimately arranged, however, on somewhat the same lines as had been adopted by us. Not, however, until after the gentlemen had a tumultuous meeting of their own at "The Apollo,"¹ a room in The Devil Tavern in Fleet Street, a house rendered famous in olden days by the society of Ben Jonson and his literary companions. It was found on clearing the ground that the old foundations were not available for modern buildings, and a new model for the inn was settled, in course of which Vine Court, already referred to, disappeared altogether. For the execution of this plan, after much consideration and some unsuccessful attempts, the Middle Temple put themselves into the hands of Dr. Nicholas Barbon² (son of the well-known Praise God Barbon) who had much employment and success in rebuilding houses after the great fire. Under his auspices the Middle Temple was rebuilt, although, after the fashion of contractors of all times, there was a failure in the course of the work, and the benchers were ultimately compelled to take the business over and complete it for themselves. The rebuilding of Hare Court and other portions of the Inner Temple, including some Inner Temple chambers over the cloisters, was the subject of much consideration.³ It was at first proposed to entrust the work to Dr. Barbon, who was rebuilding the Middle Temple, but that was not accepted. There were accordingly meetings of the two societies in the round of the church, and much feeling appears to have been aroused. It was afterwards agreed in July, 1679, that Hare Court and Pump Court should be rebuilt according to a model approved by Heneage Finch, our former treasurer, now lord chancellor. To carry out this plan a sum of £496 was borrowed from Sir Robt. Sawyer, K.C. who was afterwards attorney-general, and was elected treasurer of the inn from 1683 to 1688. The tenants of the western side of Hare Court with

 pp. 134, 141 owner of The Devil Tavern would not redress the nuisance of his building over against Hare Court, the workmen of the inn were ordered by the bench to abate it themselves. The rooms over the
 p. 136 buttery at the west end of the hall, including the upper library, which had come under the influence of the fire, were rebuilt by Sir John Heath, a son of the chief justice of Charles I., who had been treasurer in 1673.

The cloisters, as they stood before this fire, were "low mean buildings," about half their present width. They were not built over except in a part near the Inner Temple hall, where a Mr.
 Newnham had some chambers. It was originally proposed by the Middle Temple that the ground, which belonged to that society, should be covered with chambers, and that the cloisters should not be rebuilt, and they approached the Inner Temple with a view to some amicable arrangement. Roger North, in his life of Lord Keeper North, who was a bencher of the Middle Temple, gives an account of the discussion which was referred for settlement to Heneage Finch, the lord chancellor, as was usual in those cases.

The chancellor,¹ according to Roger North, "would by no "means give way to it, and reprov'd the Middle Templars very "wittily and eloquently upon the subject of students walking in even"ings there, and putting cases which, he said, was done in his time,
 "as mean and low as the buildings were then, however it comes, said
 "he, that such a benefit to students is now made so little account
 "of." And thereupon the cloisters, by the order and disposition of Sir Christopher Wren, were built as they now stand.² His plan considerably enlarged the area of the cloisters by taking in a portion of the churchyard, and some land both north and south belonging to this inn. Written directions were given by him as to the position of the columns, the strength of the floors, and the solidity of the walls, which would render the buildings both durable and secure.
 The ground plan and the elevation of the cloisters, and the chambers

² "Lives of the Norths," by Hon. Roger North, London, 1826, vol. i., p. 27.

³ The originals of these plans are in the possession of the Middle Temple, whose thus appears that this exceedingly plain and commonplace structure was the production of the great architect. Though built under his auspices it hardly adds to his reputation, and is unworthy of the place or of the church to which it forms the entrance. In all the schemes for rebuilding, great care was taken by both societies to preserve the church, by providing that new buildings should not touch the fabric, and thus to secure it, as far as possible, from danger of fire by contact with inflammable matter. The cloisters have the following inscription on a slab on the western side :

“VETUSTISSIMA TEMPLARIORUM PORTICU IGNE CONSUMPTA AN° 1678

GUILELMO WHITELOCKE: ARM° THESAUR°.”

The library and the end of the hall were rebuilt in the year 1680, at the cost of the society. The voluntary subscriptions from former members of the inn amounted in the whole to £320. The rebuilding and wainscoting of the library cost £309, towards which “Sir George Jeffryes, his majesty’s serjeant-at-law,” subscribed £40. For wainscoting the hall and setting up the screen and the music room £110 was paid. A sum of £10 was also paid for carving the arms of the society over the screen, and £10 for carving the king’s arms in oak at the top of the hall. The explosion which had destroyed the library must have at the same time damaged the eastern window of the hall with the large coats of arms, which might otherwise have been transferred to the windows of the new library.¹ The pictures from this library were afterwards set up in the hall. There were thus two libraries, one at the western end of the hall, called the upper library, where the gentlemen during their Christmas vacation played hazard, and the new library, to which there was access from the hall and the benchers’ rooms by a staircase, the remains of which existed in 1866, when the present hall was built. The losses suffered by the two societies in this second fire were not great, except in regard to the buildings, which Mr. North says,² “to say truth were better burnt than left, being for the most part ragged deformed stuff." The records of the fine office, and a portion of the Tradescant collection, comprising books and medals, then kept by Elias Ashmole, the antiquary, in an upper room also suffered from the fire.¹ Mr. North, in another connexion, gives a description of the condition of Fleet Street during the fire. It opens up a dismal view of the habits of some of our neighbours, and of the risks to which, on such occasions as these, the property of our members was subjected. "Here it was observed that women and children stood in Fleet Street ankle deep in water (for all the pipes were cut), which in that pinching cold night could not have been, in such numbers and so pertinaciously as they did, unless their husbands and friends were gone in to steal, and they stayed expecting to carry off the booty."²

This description of the fire of 1679, by a spectator and a sufferer in the calamity, affords a vivid illustration of the lines of Dryden on the great fire in the "Annus Mirabilis." The poet's reference to the cutting of the pipes, the fetching of the buckets from the neighbouring church, the working of the engines, the ladders, and above all the thieves who rush in as soon as the flames have scared away the owners of property, affords a striking corroboration of the picture drawn by Roger North of the details of the fire and of the band of women waiting in the freezing water to receive from their friends the proceeds of their plunder.³

The wooden shops facing Tanfield Court, with their backs against the church, had been a source of discomfort to the benchers of the Inner Temple for some generations, and attempts had been made to agree with the other inn for their removal. They had been rebuilt after the fire of 1666 by Roberts the panierman, Williams the stationer, and others, when the society, with a view to the possibility of their wishes being carried out, inserted a clause in the lease to the tenants that such shops were held subject to the right of the inn to cancel the lease should both houses agree to pull down "the buildings now about the church in order to the repairing and beautifying of the outside of the church." In the fire of 1678-9 they were demolished for the protection of the church, after which some were rebuilt by Williams the stationer, who, in June, 1680, in consideration of his expense in the matter, was given an extended lease for thirty years at a rental of £6. I am not aware of any drawing of these shops before the fire of 1678; but Ogilby's map, in 1671, shows the church to have been almost hidden by high wooden buildings. A drawing by R. West¹ under the date of 1737 shows the nature of the buildings after the two fires. They were low wooden sheds as far as the fourth window to the west. Against the round and the last windows they were of a more substantial character and comprised one or two stories over the ground floor. Playford's house and shop, which were at the church door at the northern end of the cloisters, held its own and does not appear to have been affected by either of the fires. Ireland,² referring to these shops, describes them as "sheds and houses of a mean cast of character, and ill suited to the situation. Here shoes, boots, wigs, and lattitats vie with each other for pre-eminence." Among the miscellaneous engravings in the library of the society of antiquaries³ is a small plate, six inches by four, headed, "Temple Church Porch."

seems to identify the stationer and his shop. The chapel of S. Ann, which had been gradually falling into ruins, was to some extent protected by these buildings, but we hear nothing of it during the whole of the period covered by this volume. It was probably shut off from the church after 1679, and what was left of it was used as a storehouse for the papers of the fine office. It was partly hidden by the shops that were erected over its ruins, but some portions, shewing where it was attached to the church, are indicated in West's drawing. It was, however, a commonplace and uninteresting building, and it was probably no loss to the society when it was altogether removed in 1827.¹

I have set out the figures representing the work done and action taken in respect of these three fires in 1666, in 1677, and in 1679. The great activity and the appliances in use at the two later fires are very remarkable in comparison with those of the former date. At that time the whole of London seems to have been helpless and paralysed, and the fire that consumed without hindrance 14,000 houses and numerous churches and chapels would, with equal facility, have destroyed the Temple, had it not been for the providential change of wind on the night of Tuesday, the 4th of September.

A fire of comparatively small dimensions occurred in August, 1683, in the buildings erected by Sir Thomas Robinson, Bart., chief prothonotary of the common pleas. He was at this time in the third year of his treasurership. The fire, which originated in Hall's Coffee house, having caught the rooms in which he lived, he leapt from the window and was killed. He was buried in the Temple church on 7th August, 1683, and a committee was appointed in Michaelmas term to inquire into the circumstances of the fire, and the conduct of the watchmen and others in relation thereto. Sir Robert Sawyer, A.G., was appointed treasurer in his place. p. 453 of the commonwealth, was much neglected during the early period of Charles II. The duty of rebuilding the inn after the fire of 1666 was probably held to be paramount to all others. But although the money which was voted towards providing a permanent house for the master of the Temple, showed that the society was not unmindful of the needs of the church, yet it must be admitted that, for some fifteen years after the restoration, little if anything had been done. The first occasion upon which attention was officially drawn to its condition was in 1675. In July of that year, John Playford, the clerk, informed the treasurer and benchers of the two societies of several matters in the church requiring speedy repair :

“FIRST, the doors in the screen which parts the church are at this time so much decayed and broken as they are no security to the church, wherein now standeth the chest with y^e communion plate, and also the several vestments and books belonging to the church.

“SECOND, the pulpit is so rotten at this time and decayed as it is in great danger of falling ; also the velvet before the pulpit and the cushion thereto belonging, are bothe so much decayed and worn out, having been so often mended, as much longer they cannot be serviceable.

“THIRD, there is at this time great want of a good bell in the steeple, which want may be soon supplied if . . . the two bells, now in the steeple, which are both cracked and useless, be cast into one, it will make an excellent bell that will be heard into all courts belonging to both societies.

Playford's peculiar position in regard to the church and to the Temple, and his credit as a musician and a writer, gave much weight to his representations, apart from their very reasonable character, and a committee was at once appointed by this society to consider his statement. There is no record of the action taken thereupon. But it was a matter of equal concern to the two societies, and nothing could be done without the concurrence of both.¹ A speedy agreement under these circumstances would have been difficult, as it clearly involved a substantial expenditure. The condition of the interior of the church was, however, under the consideration of the two societies, as it appears that they had agreed to pay £150 each for altering, and I suppose reconstructing the seats. In July, 1677, it was reported that the cost which had been originally estimated and provided for at £150 each, would be £300. It was thereupon ordered that the matter be again considered, and in the meantime that the £150 advanced be repaid to the treasurer. In November, 1677, the surveyor was called in to advise as to the arrangement of the pews and a committee was appointed to organize a fund and to solicit contributions towards the re-seating and the general repair of the church. The alterations and repairs then recommended would probably have been carried out forthwith, but for the disastrous fires of 1677 and 1678-9. These so fully occupied the minds, and were so heavy a draught upon the funds of the two societies and of their individual members, that the reparation of the church naturally stood over until the rebuilding of the two inns had been nearly completed. In the meantime, however, some work was done by private subscriptions; Lady Rainsford and Lady Littleton gave £10 towards the repair of the church windows, Lady Wilde gave £10 for the same purpose, and Serjeant Crooke gave £20 towards the repairs since the fire. The king's arms were put up in the window of the church in 1680 at a cost of £4 to this society, and the chief butler has an entry of work done by Daniel Ireland, the glazier, in the Inner Temple church, £1 4s., probably a repair to a window on the south side. Playford's suggestion as to the recasting of the two cracked bells, so as to make one sound bell, was carried out after the church was restored.¹ There is at present only one bell which bears the following inscription:²

"Sir R. Sawyer, A.G. t. Inner Temple, Sir Henry Chauncy t. Middle Temple, John Bartlet made me 1686." p. 239

In 1681-2 Sir Christopher Wren was requested to advise the societies as to the requirements of the church. In May, 1682, he reported that the church was "very ruinous for want of repair," and that the cost of the necessary work would be not less than £1,400. This outlay was undertaken by the two societies, and it was ordered that there be an aid roll to which every bencher be assessed at £3, every barrister at £2 5s., and every gentleman under the bar at

p. 177 £1 10s. As, however, the collection of these sums required much pp. 180, 181 time, and the repairing and repewing of the church, with the pro-tion, Sir Thomas Robinson, the treasurer, undertook to provide the necessary funds upon an indemnity being given by the society.

 p. 198 Under these conditions the work went forward. The church was
 p. 212 entirely repaved with alternate squares of black and white marble, the walls were wainscotted up to the bottom of the windows, square pews were constructed within the five aisles formerly described, the round was separated from the oblong portion of the church by a carved oak screen and organ loft, and the high and subsidiary altars, with whatever remained of their original construction, were replaced by a carved altarpiece reaching several feet above the bottom of the centre window. A tall pulpit and reading-desk, with an elaboratelycarved sounding-board, were placed in the centre aisle, about half way down the church.

On the floor one step led from the nave to the pews and two steps from the nave to the altar. The screen went completely across the church and blocked the beautiful view from the western door to the altar. The central archway was occupied by the organ, which, with its ornamental front, ran up nearly to the ceiling. Entrance to the north and south aisles of the church was through the doorways under the side arches. The carved work behind the altar and the carvings over the organ were by Grinling Gibbons.¹ The former appears from the accounts to have cost the two societies at least £570. The columns of
 p. 199 the church, however, were disfigured and endangered by numerous monumental slabs, to support which the marble was cut away. The handsome monuments of Plowden, of Martin, and of the bishop, were still retained against the walls, where numerous tablets were also to be seen.² In the round portion the figures of the knights were inclosed within rails which were painted and gilt. Among other entries in relation to the church, I find in the accounts for 1673-4
 p. 98 a payment of £3 10s. "For painting and mending the Crucifix."
 Whether this was replaced in the church after the restoration, or

Other entries are for a purple velvet pulpit cushion with heavy gold tassels, £4 10^s: for 13 iron candlesticks £2 1^s 4^d: for the Inner Temple porter's staff of bamboo with silver head, £7 1^s: and for his gown, £4: for locks and hinges for the pews, £10.¹ The vault for the use of the Inner Temple was also built at this date at a cost to the society of £60. Thenceforward burials took place in this vault, which was not finally closed until the present century.

A summary of the expenditure on the church at this period shows the inn to have contributed £952 16s. od. The church was opened to the public on the 11th February 1682, when the Bishop of Rochester preached, and was entertained at a dinner given by the two societies in the master's house. On the following Sunday there was a special sermon by the Revd. John Standish, D.D., chaplain in ordinary to his Majesty.²

A good description of the church as it existed in 1703, less than twenty years after the completion of the work, is to be found in the "New View of London."³ The author says :

"It is built of the antient Gothic Order, the Walls Stone, covered with finishing and strengthened with Buttresses : has a Treble Roof covered with Lead and supported with neat pillars of Sussex Marble and the floor of the whole is paved with black and white marble : that of the Chancel 2 steps higher than the middle and 1 higher than the side Iles : the Iles are 5 in number viz. : 3 (as is usual) running E. and W. and one cross Ile near the entrance into the Chancel and another Parallel with the last betⁿ the W. end of the Ranges of Pews and the screen. ¹ There are several entries referring to the "type" and "tipes," e.g. "for gilding the tipes of the church," "cutting a hole for the type to hang to." According to the terms of the period the word "type" had several meanings. One was the canopy over the pulpit, which in this case hung from the roof. Another was the capping of a turret which was gilt at the same time as the folding doors. See "Glossary of Architecture." Oxford, 1850. J. H. Parker, vol. i., p. 503. p. 212

The pulpit is also finely carved and finnier'd placed near the E. end of the middle Ile, the Sound Board is pendant from the roof of the church: It is enriched with several carved arches, a crown, festoons, cherubims, vases, &c. Nothing appears to have been done to the chapel of S. Ann, which is described by Sir Robert Smirke¹ as a small antient building consisting of a crypt with a vaulted chamber over it, both formerly communicating with the church. In 1827 its removal became necessary by reason of its ruinous and decayed condition. It had formed no part of the original edifice of the round church, but had been built up against the walls at a subsequent date. Closer investigation showed that this date could not have been many years after the completion of the eastern portion of the church, and that it was in fact nearly contemporaneous with it.

The restoration and embellishment of the church, under the superintendence of Sir Christopher Wren, seem to have suggested to the societies the propriety of providing an organ suitable to the place and worthy of the two houses. For this purpose they took the opinion of Dr. Blow and other masters of music, and entertained them at a dinner at the joint expense. Following upon this conference, the treasurers of the two inns, viz., Sir Thomas Robinson of the Inner and Sir Francis Withens of the Middle, had a conversation in September, 1682, with Bernard Smith, the king's organ maker, who had already built the organ for Westminster Abbey.¹ The subjects under discussion were the making of an organ for the church and the setting up of an organ loft, both to be, as suggested, under the superintendence of Bernard Smith. The conversation, however, did not amount to a contract, and shortly afterwards the name of Renatus Harris² was submitted to the benchers as that of a proper person to build their organ. Not being able to decide at once, the benchers agreed, in 1682-3, that if each artist would set up an organ in one of the halls, they would choose that organ for the church which had "the greatest number of excellencies." In the meantime one Phillips, who had made a case for the organ to be erected in the church, was ordered to remove it forthwith. The artists were subsequently permitted to erect their organs in the church. Harris's was placed on the south side near the communion table, and Smith's between the church and the round walk. In the summer of 1684 the two organs were completed and the competition began. Dr. Blow and Purcell, two famous organists, played for Smith, and Giovanni Battista Draghi,³ organist to Queen Catherine, performed for Harris. Both organs appear to have been of great excellence in every respect, so that the general public as well as the benchers were very undecided as to which was the finer instrument. The competition became tedious, the partisans of the respective candidates caused scandal by the violence of their attitude, and the question promised no early solution, when the benchers of the Inner Temple, on the 26th May, 1685, appointed a small committee to confer with a committee of the Middle Temple to nominate some persons as judges to decide between the two competitors. On the 2nd June, 1685, the Middle Temple passed a resolution in favour of

p. 226 purchasing the organ of Bernard Smith as the more suitable for the church. The Inner Temple, however, declined to take upon themselves to select the organ, and insisted on the joint appointment of skilled persons to make the selection. Resolutions were passed by the two societies and meetings of a joint committee were held, but each society adhering to its resolution, the Middle insisting on the selection of Smith's organ and the Inner, without objecting to Smith or adhering to Harris, insisting that the selection of so costly and important a possession should be guaranteed by the opinions of certain of the best and most independent masters of music in England, the matter came to a deadlock. In this position the two societies took the course which was always adopted under similar circumstances. As they had recently acted in regard to Hare Court and afterwards as to the rebuilding of the cloisters, so they did with regard to the organ. They applied to the lord chancellor to arbitrate between them. On the 26th of June, 1685, the Middle Temple appointed a committee "to state in writing the matters in difference between the society and the Inner Temple about the choice of an organ for the Temple church," and to attend the lord keeper thereon.¹ The lord keeper at this date was Francis North, Lord Guilford, who, however, died in September, 1685, and nothing was done by him in the matter. In February, 1685-6, another committee² was appointed to apply to the lord chancellor for his determination upon the subject. The chancellor then was Lord Jeffryes, who appears to have taken the matter in hand and to have decided in favour of Bernard Smith's organ. The tradition, therefore, which has come down from Tudway³ (1705-1726) to the present time, that the Temple organ was the choice of Lord Jeffryes seems, like nearly all traditions connected with the law and its professors, to have a substantial foundation in fact. That Jeffryes was a member of the Inner Temple and had a voice or a casting vote in the choice is not consistent with the facts. Jeffryes was no longer a member of the inn. He had left the society in 1680 when he was created a serjeant, in the same way that Lord Guilford had left the Middle Temple on his being appointed chief justice of the common pleas in 1674. Nor is there any reason to credit Jeffryes with a knowledge of music. He became the umpire between the two societies solely by reason of his being the lord chancellor, and, as such, the person who customarily settled differences between them which could not be adjusted by means of a conference or a joint committee.

The benchers acted with much liberality towards these two artists. To Smith, the full price of his organ was paid and he received a salary for tuning and repairs. To Renatus Harris this society, in consideration of his expenses and his labours, advanced £200 upon his bonds,¹ which they afterwards in February, 1690, ordered to be delivered over to him.² The price of the organ appears to have been £1,000, of which this inn paid £500. The matter of the organ was thus concluded in 1686, and it was afterwards erected on the spot designed for it by Sir Christopher Wren. The societies seem, however, to have been in no hurry to introduce the melody of an organ into the service of the church, for it was not until 27th of May, 1688, that the first organist was appointed. Mr. Francis Pigott occupied that position at a salary of £25 a year, from each society, "he providing and paying thereout an able blower," and £10 a year was paid to Bernard Smith, by each inn, for cleaning and tuning his organ.

A memorandum in the miscellaneous papers,³ bearing date about 1735, and giving an account of the present organ and its selection, has the following statement. "It does not appear there was any organ in the church before the year 1685." How far that may be an accurate statement is open to doubt. There is, however, no reference in any part of the proceedings in 1682-86 to any old organ, or indeed to any organ having been in the Temple church recently before that date. The only references in our records to the existence of an organ are of a very early period. In the inventory of the possessions of the knights templars at the New Temple in London, when their property was confiscated by Edward II., in 1307, is an entry, "In the church . . . Two pairs of organs, price 40sh."⁴ In the reign of Henry VIII. (30th January, 1518-19) an order was made for "a roll containing the names of members of the society, in order that from them may be raised 70*sh.*, for new organs in the church, for the part of the Inner Temple." It would appear, therefore, that at an early period, an organ, or, as the expression then was, "a pair of organs," were used in the church, although there is no record of any dealing with or renewal of the organs from 1519 to the date now under consideration, a period of over 160 years.

With the exception of the plans of the cloisters, to which I have referred as being in the possession of the Middle Temple, I have not had the good fortune to meet with any drawings of Sir Christopher Wren used either in the Temple or in the Temple church. There is, however, among the collection of Wren's drawings at All Souls, Oxford,¹ of which college he was a fellow, a drawing for a church, unnamed. It represents the western end of a church with a carved oak screen extending across the building. This is surmounted by an organ gallery, carrying a large organ ornamented with carvings and with hanging drapery. It has a very considerable resemblance to the western end of our church, where the organ was hung with curtains,² and pilasters, pediments and other classical ornaments formed part of the design. This may, therefore, possibly have been one of the drawings for the arrangement of that portion of the church. From 1674-1684, Wren was engaged, according to Mr. Blomfield, in rebuilding the greater part of the Temple. His work is described as quite plain, only enriched with quoins and well-proportioned cornices and a few charming door-ways.³ Mr. Blomfield gives me, as examples, the pediment and Ionic order in Portland stone and gauged brick in the Middle Temple gateway. Wren's influence, he thinks, and probably also his design, are traceable in New Court and the adjoining courts, also in the houses with gauged brick doorways, notably one with engaged Corinthian columns in brick, in King's Bench Walk. These are regarded as excellent early examples of the use of soft bricks rubbed and fine-jointed in putty, a material which Wren used more freely and successfully than any English architect before or since. He was frequently to be seen in the Temple advising as to the church, and among the accounts for the year 1682-3, are payments for various dinners at the "Devil Tavern" to Sir Christopher Wren when he had been giving orders to the workmen, superintending the plastering, colouring, and whitening the Inner Temple side of the church, settling the estimates for the carved panels on the benchers' pews and otherwise employed on the work. Nor was he in other respects unconnected with the Temple, for Sir William Wren was a member of the Middle Temple, and was buried in the Temple church, on the 1st January, 1689-90.

During the period comprised in this volume, the services of the church were performed by three clergymen—the master, who enjoyed the house and to whom we paid, as our share, a stipend of £100 per annum, a reader to whom we paid £50 per ann., and an assistant curate or reader of prayers to whom we paid £30 per ann. To these should be added the names of Dr. Ken, Dr. Crisp and Dr. South, who preached at Christmas by request of the students and junior members of the society and at their expense. The masters were Dr. Ball, Dr. William Sherlock and Dr. Thomas Sherlock.

Dr. Ball, Prebendary of Lincoln and of Ely, and Rector of Bluntisham, to whom reference has already been made, was appointed to the mastership of the Temple on the promotion of Dr. Gauden to the bishopric of Exeter in 1660. Dr. Ball's conduct in respect of the building of the master's house recommended him to the kindly consideration of the Temples, and on many other occasions he showed the personal interest which he took in the society. An incident in reference to this gentleman has not been elucidated. There are charges in 1671-2 for providing witnesses and otherwise in regard to "Dr. Ball's trial," from which it appears that the Inner Temple was supporting Dr. Ball in his trial, whatever the question may have been. He died in April, 1684, at the age of 86, and was buried in the new vestry on the south side of the church. In that church already lay the bones of his two wives, who died successively in March, 1667-8, and in August, 1681, and of four sons, Burnell, John, Thomas, and William, who died respectively in 1670, in 1679, in 1681, and in 1682.

divine, with a great reputation as a preacher. He had held the living of S. George, Botolph Lane, and was a prebendary of S. Paul's before being appointed master of the Temple. He held strong views as to the divine right of kings and the duty of passive obedience, and he refused for some months to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary. This resulted in his being temporarily deprived, in August, 1689, of all his offices and emoluments, including those of the mastership of the Temple. During this period—which was, however, in effect only one of suspension—he published the most celebrated of his works, “A Practical Discourse on Death,” being the substance of sermons preached in the Temple church. In the dedication of this book to the benchers of the two societies he alludes to his deprivation in these terms :

“One Reason of Publishing this Plain Discourse is, because I can't now Preach to you as formerly I have done, and have no other way left of discharging my Duty to You, but by making the Press supply the Pulpitt. Part of this you have already heard, and should have heard the rest, had I enjoyed the same Liberty still : which God restore me again when He sees fit : if not his Will be done. And the only Reason of this Dedication is, to make this publick and thankful Acknowledgment (before I am forced from You, if I must be so Unhappy) of Your Great Respects, and many singular Favours to me : which have always been so free and generous, that they never gave Time nor left any Room for me to ask : especially that obliging Welcome you gave me at my first coming, I mean Your Present of a House, which besides the Conveniences and Pleasures of a Delightful Habitation, has afforded me that which I value much more, the frequent Opportunities of Your Conversation.”¹

p. 256 The society, recognizing his great popularity, had presented him on the 8th Nov., 1688, with a cask of canary and a hogshead of claret, which were afterwards, on the 10th Nov., changed for a pair of silver candlesticks, bearing the arms of the Inner Temple. The master having, on the 10th February, 1689-90, consented to pray for the king and queen, and in August, 1690, to take the oaths of allegiance to them as monarchs de facto, he was permitted to retain
p. 273 his preferments, and continued to reside and preach in the Temple.²

¹ The eighteenth edition of this book was published in 1723, sixteen years after his death.

² The popular excitement attendant upon Sherlock's conversion from the attitude of a non-juror to that of a supporter of the existing government, with his subsequent acceptance of the deanery of S. Paul's, is described at length by Lord Macaulay (“History,” vol. iv., pp. 44-51).

In 1690 he was paid £50 by the society for the expenses of the preachers engaged by him during his suspension. In 1691 he was appointed dean of S. Paul's. In January, 1694-5, he preached in the Temple Church a eulogistic sermon on the late queen, Mary, who had died on the 28th December, 1694. He resigned his mastership in 1704, and died in 1707. He was succeeded by his son, Dr. Thomas Sherlock,¹ an equally distinguished and eloquent preacher, who was successively master of S. Catherine's Hall, Cambridge, chaplain to queen Anne, dean of Norwich, prebendary and dean of Chichester, bishop of Bangor and bishop of Salisbury. Having declined the archbishopric of York, he was, in 1748, made bishop of London. In November, 1753, being still bishop of London, he travelled to the Temple from his palace at Fulham to announce his resignation of the mastership, which he had held in conjunction with his other preferments for a period of fifty years. He spoke of his relation to the two societies as being the great happiness of his life, "as it introduced me to the acquaintance of some of the greatest men of the age, and afforded me the opportunities of improvement by living and conversing with gentlemen of a liberal education, and of great learning and experience." He was extremely popular with the members of the Temple, and dying in July, 1771, was buried at Fulham. In 1725 he published, at the request of the two societies, a series of "Discourses on the Use and Intent of Prophecy,"² comprising sermons preached in the Temple church in April and May, 1724. It went through several editions, and was much attacked by religious and political opponents.

Our society, which did not escape from some association with the gunpowder plot, was not altogether exempted from the evil effects of the popish plot of 1678. Richard Langhorne, a roman catholic gentleman, was one of the earliest victims of Oates and Bedloe. He was a barrister of this inn, having chambers in Inner Temple Lane,³ where he practised chiefly as a conveyancer. After the great fire of 1666 the house of commons appointed a committee, of which Sir Robert Brook, M.P., was chairman, "to inquire into the causes of the late fire." Numerous informations were filed and amongst them the following :

" Mr. Light of Ratcliff, having some discourse with Mr. Langhorne of the Middle (?) Temple, Barrister (reputed a zealous Papist) about February —65 last, after some discourse in disputation about Religion, he took him by the hand, and said to him, you expect great things in Sixty-Six, and think that Rome will be destroyed, but what if it be London."¹

This being reported to the house on the 22nd January, 1666-67, Langhorne was called before the parliamentary committee, and examined as to whether the disaster had not, to his knowledge, been caused by the treachery of the popish faction. He was thus a person who had been already suspected, and a fit subject for Oates and his witnesses. These denounced him as a party to the plot. He was arrested in his chambers on the 7th of October, 1678, by a warrant from the privy council, and was kept in close confinement in Newgate until his trial. It was alleged that Langhorne had, in his chambers, openly discussed with Oates the killing of the king and other treasons, and had shown to him commissions granted by the pope to various persons, amongst them being one to himself as judge advocate of the army. It was also alleged by the witnesses that Langhorne was party to an offer of £10,000 being made to Sir George Wakeman to poison the king,² an offer which, it was said, Sir George refused as the amount was too small by £5,000. Upon this evidence Langhorne was condemned and executed, denying to the last the truth of Oates and Bedloe's story. As it was alleged that these commissions, along with a number of compromising letters, which it was sworn he had copied into a register, were in his chambers, these were immediately seized and held by the inn, and officers were put to watch them. His books, papers and writings were carefully searched, and it is fair to assume that nothing criminatory was found, as no original paper was produced at his trial. When the fire broke out in January, 1678-9, all these papers were removed and replaced when the danger was past but the watching of the chambers was continued till after his death. He was tried on the 14th June, 1679,¹ and executed on the following 14th July. There is little reason to doubt that he was entirely innocent of the charge. The trial of Sir George Wakeman, who was indicted with Langhorne, was by reason of illness postponed until the 18th July, 1679, four days after Langhorne's execution. Wakeman was then acquitted by the jury.² Chief Justices Scroggs and North, who both assisted at the trial of Langhorne, had by this time formed a distrust of Oates and his witnesses, and agreed with the jury in not believing their evidence. The benchers out of kindness to Mrs. Langhorne, his widow, permitted her to sell her late husband's chambers for £50, and subsequently gave her £25 out of the funds of the house. In February, 1684-5, some of his clients' deeds and papers had been handed over to them, and in November, 1687, the remainder were delivered to his son.

There is little to notice in the short reign of James II. Bonfires celebrated the defeat of the rebels in the west in 1685, and the birth of the Prince of Wales, the old pretender, in 1688. Luttrell, under date of 5th November, 1686, says: "orders have been sent to the inns of court for calling several roman catholics to the barr: and accordingly 6 have been called at Graies Inn, 2 at Lincolns Inn and 1 of the Inner House."³ The substantial accuracy of this entry is established, so far as the "Inner House" is concerned, by the records of our society. On the 5th February, 1686-7, Martin Hildesby, or Hildesley, was ordered, at the bench table, to be called to the bar "on his majesty's special recommendation," and at the parliament held on the 11th February following, he was duly called. That this gentleman was a roman catholic, and that without his majesty's "special recommendation" he would not have been called, I entertain no doubt. The inns still held to their procedure, requiring candidates for the bar to take the sacrament, as appears from an entry in the preceding 16th November.

p. 241 On that day Alexander Fraser petitioned the bench that he might be called under special circumstances, without having kept the number of terms required by the regulations. He had been a member of the inn for many years, but had been much employed in foreign service, and was then about to attend the Duke of Albemarle in Jamaica. An order was thereupon made "that he be called to the bar provided he receive the sacrament in the Temple Church."

p. 240 At the parliament held on the 28th November, 1686, Alexander Fraser was
p. 201 duly called. In May, 1689, an order was made that those who had been called to the bar within two years and had not taken the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and received the sacrament according to

p. 266 the order of the house, should attend the bench table. In pursuance
p. 268 of this order, Martin Hildesley with Nathaniel Piggott and Richard Delamer, were ordered to attend the table in November, 1689. Piggott having then and there refused to take the oaths tendered to him, his call was vacated and he was suspended from commons.

p. 278 In November, 1690, his suspension was taken off, and as we hear no more of Martin Hildesley, I assume that he either took the oaths and received the sacrament or was held not to have been within the rule, inasmuch as he had not been called within two years of May, 1689.

The entries relating to Jeffryes, who ended his career with the flight of his royal master, are not very numerous, but such as they are, they show the interest which he took in the society. He was born in the year of king Charles's execution, the son of a Welsh gentleman of old family. His father and his elder brother were successively high sheriffs of the county of Denbigh, and his younger brother was a prebendary of Canterbury. He was educated at Shrewsbury and afterwards at S. Paul's school, whence he went to Westminster under Dr. Busby, from whom it has been suggested that he learned the efficacy of flogging as a punishment for evil doers. From Westminster he was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, at the age of 14, and in the following year, 1663, he was admitted at

p. 55 the Inner Temple. While a student he was deputed, by the mock parliament held by the gentlemen at Christmas, 1667, to invite Dr.

Crisp to preach in the Temple Church on the following Sunday. On the 22nd November, 1668, being then twenty years of age, he was called to the bar. In March, 1668-9, he was selected, as we have already seen, by Mr. Goodfellow, the reader, to accompany Mr. Wroth, as a deputation to the lord mayor and court of aldermen as to the proposed bearing up of his lordship's sword in the Inner Temple. He was afterwards called before the council board to answer for the part he took in those proceedings. In 1671, at the age of 23, he was elected common serjeant, and in 1678, at the age of 30, recorder of London. In November, 1674, he was discharged of his duty as reader in Clement's Inn. In January, 1677-8, he was elected to the bench of this society, and in February, 1678-9, his eldest son, John, then aged 8 years, was specially admitted. In 1680 he was created serjeant-at-law and left the inn. In May, 1680, his son was admitted to his father's chambers, and later in 1680, being then king's serjeant, he gave £40 towards the cost of wainscoting the hall and the library. In 1683, at the age of 35, he was chief justice of the King's Bench, and in 1685, at the age of 37, he was lord chancellor. He took an active part in dealing with the fire of 1679, and was called in, as chancellor, in 1686 to settle the dispute as to the organ between the two societies. In January, 1685-6, having completed the business of the assize, a committee of this inn waited upon him to know if he would please to have a play when he dined with the benchers on grand day. This he accepted, and heard "The Committee." A similar invitation went to him in October, 1686, and he dined again and saw "The Scornful Lady" on the 1st November. He received a like invitation for All Souls, 1687, and saw the play of "The Cheats of Scapin," a rendering of Molière's celebrated play. The year 1685 was distinguished by Monmouth's rebellion and the "bloody assize," and in 1687, with a knowledge of all his judicial errors, but, as I suppose, with a feeling of kindness towards their old companion, the benchers commissioned Sir Godfrey Kneller to paint the portrait of Lord Jeffryes at a cost of £50. It was paid for in 1687 and "set up in the hall."¹ The compliment thus paid to Jeffryes was unique. As far as I have been able to ascertain it was the first occasion upon which the fellows of this inn commissioned any artist to paint the portrait of any of their number and paid for the portrait from the funds of the society. A biographical sketch of Jeffryes would be beyond the scope of this preface, nor is it necessary, for the subject has been treated by writers well qualified to undertake the task, the last of whom, a barrister of our inn, has given much care and attention to the study.¹ The judgment of many generations has condemned Jeffryes as a violent, overbearing, and unjust judge, without considering whether upon fuller examination of his story there may not be some reason to doubt the absolute propriety of so merciless and wholesale a condemnation. There exist, at the present time, four contemporaneous portraits of Jeffryes by Sir Godfrey Kneller. One when, at the age of 30, he was recorder of London; one when, at the age of 36, he was lord chief justice; one in the possession of Lord Tankerville, when he was lord chancellor, at the age of 38; and one painted for this society as already mentioned. They all agree in presenting him as a man of dignified mien and of fine features. And though they do not portray a person of amiability, they are consistently wanting in those indications of drink, debauchery, and savagery with which his personal appearance is usually associated. He died in the Tower in 1688, and was buried in the church of All-Hallows Barking. After the revolution Jeffryes' picture was removed from the hall to the chambers of Mr. Holloway, a bencher of the inn, where it appears still to have been in 1693. At that time his son, who was a member of the inn, having asked that the picture might be given to him, an order was made on the 9th February, 1693-4, that "the treasurer do declare to Lord Jeffryes that at his lordship's desire, the house do make a present to his lordship of his father's picture, now in Mr. Holloway's chamber." This picture is now in the possession of Mr. Philip Yorke, of Errig Park, Wrexham, in the county of Denbigh.² Beside it, is a portrait of Sir Thomas Jeffryes, Knight, of Alcantara in Spain, a brother of the chancellor.

Another familiar name appears constantly in this volume. Christopher Milton, brother of John Milton, was a member of our inn, lived within it, and took part in our affairs. He was a younger brother of the poet, and after taking his degree at Christ's College, Cambridge, he entered the Inner Temple. In January, 1639-40, he was called to the bar. He was a staunch royalist, unwavering in his fidelity to the throne. As a lawyer he had little, if any success, and except for the reflected light cast upon him by his distinguished brother, he would probably have passed through life without notice. At the restoration he was, in November, 1660, included in a batch of royalists elected to the bench, and was chosen reader for the summer vacation of 1665. He never appears to have been treasurer, but he continued to be a frequent attendant at the bench until the year 1686, when he was, at the age of 71, created a baron of the exchequer by James II. In November, 1679, he appears to have been in some financial difficulties, as he was summoned before his brother benchers and ordered to pay up his arrears, with a threat that if that were not done by saturday they would "proceed to padlock his chambers: and that none of his charges be allowed for repairing his chambers unless he shew better cause." These payments had not been made in February, 1679-80, when a peremptory order was made against him and the money, I suppose, was produced. His son was also ordered to pay £4 for caution money. In 1687 he was promoted to be a justice of the common pleas, and in 1688 he retired on a pension. He continued after his judgeship to retain his chambers in the inn, and these were refitted for his use. Entries appear in 1686 for locks and ironwork for Baron Milton's chambers, £3 19s.; for wainscotting Baron Milton's chambers, £66 7s. 4d.; and for his bookshelves, £5 9s. 7d. He died at Ipswich in 1693, aged 78. Three of his sons were specially admitted to the inn: viz., Christopher, in 1661, Richard, in November, 1667, and Thomas, his eldest son, in November, 1670.

On the 11th of December, 1688, the king left London on his way to France. On saturday the 15th he was at Rochester, after his release from his captors at Sheerness. On sunday the 16th he returned to London, and the society of the Inner Temple were among the very few of his subjects who did him any honour. They lighted "a bonfire on the king's return from Rochester." On the morning of the 18th he left Whitehall for Rochester, and then quitted his kingdom and his country for ever.

I have drawn attention in previous volumes to the literary and artistic tastes of the society as exemplified by the various entertainments, provided by the inn, for the amusement of their members and their guests. We have seen that the gross feeding and the inane burlesque of the grand christmas gradually gave way to the masque. The masque from being at first merely spectacular, in course of time assumed the proportion of profusely decorated scenery, accompanied by song and dance, and then of allegories, in the composition of which Beaumont, Ben Jonson, Daniel, Myddleton, Brown, and other poets of the day did not scruple to participate. Under the two early Stuart kings dramatic works were introduced to the partial exclusion of the masque, and we now arrive at a period, after the restoration, when the masque disappeared and its place was occupied by stage plays, one at All Hallows (the 1st November), and one at Candlemass (the 2nd February). And these plays, excepting at the times of the plague and of the several fires, were regularly given. The revels of the old type with mock chancellors, and other high officials and sham ceremonies of a court ceased, so far as there is any record of them in our inn, before the commonwealth. The master of the revels was, however, appointed yearly, with a salary of £2, and there was a regular payment for music, even through the time of the puritan ascendancy. The marshals for christmas were also appointed, but their offices were sinecure. The grand days were still continued and, as before, invitations to judges and other distinguished personages were still given at the reader's feast. But the amusements were of a different type, and the duties of the master of the revels were of a less onerous character. The old style of entertainment seems, however, to have been continued at the other inns. In January, 1662, Evelyn was present at Lincoln's Inn at "a solemn foolery" of the Prince de la Grange with his mock princes, grandees, and nobles¹ and in January, 1667-8, he saw the revels at the Middle Temple, which he describes as "an old riotous custom, and has relation neither to virtue nor policy."² We were not, however, free from reproach, for our records show that gambling was openly and extensively carried on in the upper library at christmastide. And although it was ordered that there should be only one table for hazard, yet strangers played as well as members, and the games were probably sufficiently high and riotous to have justified, in our case also, the unfavourable criticism of Mr. Evelyn. p. 55

The plays which after the restoration were received with public applause, soon assumed a very different character from those of the previous reigns. Shakespeare had died on the 23rd April, 1616, Beaumont in the previous March, Fletcher in August, 1625, and Ben Jonson in August, 1637. During the civil wars, and under the commonwealth, the times were not propitious for the study or the encouragement of the drama. But a school of dramatic art and poetry arose after the accession of the new king, which went far to justify the antipathy which many people, untouched with puritanism or precision, entertained towards the stage. It becomes, under the circumstances, interesting to consider what was the view, taken by a society of learned and educated gentlemen, of the plays that were then produced, an opinion which can most effectually be tested by a consideration of the works which they introduced into their hall. It will be observed that the names of the plays are given in our books with great irregularity. It seems to have depended altogether upon chance, or upon the fancy of the clerk, whether the name of the play was entered or not. The payments, however, in all cases, are strictly chronicled. It is, therefore, not unreasonable to regard the performances, so given, as fairly representative of the class of drama which found favour with the benchers and barristers of the society. The plays, thus chronicled, between the accession of Charles II. in 1660 and the flight of James II. in 1688, are twenty in number, most of them comparatively unknown to playgoers of the present generation. Attention is at once struck by the fact that, during the whole of this period of twenty-eight years, not one play of Shakespeare is recorded as having been produced. Dryden, writing in 1665, says that two plays of Beaumont and Fletcher are produced throughout the year to one of Shakespeare or Ben Jonson, and he gives a reason for this which is not altogether accepted by Hallam.¹ I think, however, that the explanation is not far to seek. Shakespeare being comparatively without liberal education, and not having had the advantage of mixing from his youth with gentlemen and gentlemen's sons, had not acquired the art of writing to the taste of that class from whom the inns of court were recruited, and without whose presence a theatre could not be kept open. Shakespeare smacked of the ruff and the farthingale long after these eccentricities of costume had disappeared, while Beaumont and Fletcher, though his contemporaries, wrote as men who had mixed habitually from their boyhood with persons of polite education and of good society, where manners were easier and more natural, and conversation was more ready and sparkling. A combination of tragedy or comedy with alternate scenes of farce, in the nature of a subsidiary plot, commended itself to audiences of the seventeenth century, and will be found in nearly all these plays. It soon, however, died out, except perhaps in some of the minor theatres, in which it has been received with admiration even during the present century. Most of these plays, and certainly those of Beaumont and Fletcher, are either of foreign (generally of Spanish) extraction, or deal with persons and incidents alien to English tastes and habits. This gave the writers greater freedom in the construction of their plots. Scenes which would be condemned as absurd, if applied to English people, would not meet with the same condemnation when applied to foreign countries, as to whose modes of thought and of life the English of the seventeenth century were both ignorant and credulous. During the eighteenth century, the fate that had overtaken Shakespeare fell upon Beaumont and Fletcher. The qualities, which kept their plays upon the stage to the end of the seventeenth century, failed to attract when the manners of polite society changed. Their comedies no longer filled the playhouses when they ceased to reflect the sentiments and habits of the class who supported the drama. And the same rule applied to Wycherley, Congreve, Shadwell and others of that class. When plays which dealt alone with variations of the cardinal vices, which represented a state of society not recognized as belonging to any country or any age, and which depended for their success upon witty dialogue and cynical allusions, failed to please the audience, the works of these various dramatists of the restoration disappeared from the stage, and few, if any, were ever resuscitated. To enable the templars of the twentieth century to form an opinion of the tastes of their predecessors, I give some account of these plays. They are not commonly known at the present day, but, during the period comprised in this volume, they were the principal, if not the only entertainment provided for our members and our guests, and formed an integral portion of the life of our inn. They were, as will be seen, mostly performed by the players of the king's house. Those of the duke's house were only occasionally engaged. Women appeared upon the English boards for the first time after the restoration, a change which was not to the taste of many cultivated persons. The actors invariably received £20 a play, and the usual payments were made for the music. They were also, though this was probably confined to the ladies who then trod the boards, occasionally sent for in coaches; coach hire being an item on these occasions. An entry in January, 1681-2, "ffor sweetmeats for Madam Gwin £01:00:00," with music, and dice, attests the popularity of the celebrated artist. p. 98

2nd Nov., 1663. "THE BROTHERS." A comedy in five acts, by James Shirley.¹ (By the King's players.) p. 16

This play was licensed in 1626, but was not published until 1652, the original title being "The Brothers, a Comedie, as it was acted at the private House in Black Fryers." The scene is laid in Spain, and both prologue and epilogue refer to the old Spanish plot, and the defeat of the armada which was still (in 1626) sure to elicit the cheers of the audience. Some passages of the play are considered as being of great literary merit. James Shirley wrote in the time of Charles I., who is said to have considered the "Gamesters" one of the best plays he had seen for some years. A not very favourable criticism of Shirley's works is given by Hallam,² who I think hardly does justice to Shirley's poetic instinct.

Candlemass, 1663-4.—"EPICENE, OR THE SILENT WOMAN." A comedy in five acts, by Ben Jonson. (By His Majesty's players.)

This was a favourite comedy, not only at the time of its production in or about 1609, but also at its revival among the plays of the restoration period. Morose, a rich uncle, has a nephew whom he treats scurvily and leaves in penury. The scheme of the play is an attempt, by this young man and his friends, to drive Morose to make some provision for his nephew. Morose's character is implied by his name, and he has in addition a dread of noise and bustle. Under p. 25

these circumstances they bring about a marriage between him and a boy passing as Epicene, a very silent, reserved and undemonstrative woman. Directly after the marriage the supposed bride breaks out into voluble and violent language, introduces noisy and disreputable women of her acquaintance, called the "Collegiate Ladies," opposes her husband and orders the household about with the airs of a major domo. The uncle is thus driven to despair, and promises to make a liberal settlement on the nephew if he can get a divorce. This device occupies the fifth act, during which all the company are on the stage. A sea captain, Tom Otter, and a barber, Cutbeard, assume the parts of a divine and of a learned civilian, and discuss with great humour, but a certain want of delicacy, the various grounds upon which a nullity can be granted. In the result the silent bride discloses herself as a boy, and the two learned disputants agree that it is a case in which a nullity must be decreed, as there was an error personæ. Ben Jonson showed much courage in the devising and producing of this plot, as it was nearly contemporaneous with the celebrated case of the Countess of Essex, afterwards Countess of Somerset. In the details of this case James I. took great personal interest; and to judge from contemporary writers it was the subject of discussion, not only among the lords and ladies of the court but generally throughout the country. Tom Otter is described as a valiant captain in the navy who, in his own house, is ruled by a termagant wife whom he describes as his princess. This character in the revival pleased Charles II., who called his naval brother (the Duke of York) *Tom Otter*¹ out of pleasant allusion to his domestic difficulties. Hallam describes it as written with a great deal of spirit, and thinks it has a value as a representation of London life in the higher ranks of society at that period. "It is a proof," he says, "of Jonson's extensive learning that the story of the play and several particular passages have been detected in a writer so much out of the beaten track as Libanius."² Dryden wrote a prologue and an epilogue for the revival. The former was spoken by Hart and the latter by Mrs. Marshall. Burbage had formerly played in it.³ At this time Betterton was cast for the part of Morose.⁴

All Saints' Day, 1664.—“THE NIGHT WALKER, OR THE LITTLE THIEF,” a comedy in five acts by Beaumont and Fletcher.¹ (By His Majesty's players.)

A very bright, witty, and amusing comedy. Maria, a young heiress, is compelled by her mother to marry Justice Allgripe, a wealthy miser. Two young cavaliers conspire, by paying Maria great attention, to make the justice jealous of her on his wedding day. She swoons, and being supposed to be dead, is put into a coffin. Her mother prudently packs away the plate and the wedding presents in a large chest, and to prevent the justice getting them, puts the chest in the same room with the coffin. Lurcher, a philosophic cavalier, who has turned housebreaker on principle, aided by the little thief, a young woman masquerading in boy's clothes, frightens away the occupants of the house by imitations of the devil searching for the murderers of Maria. Having thus got rid of the household, they steal what, in the dark, they believe to be the box of plate, but which turns out to be the coffin. This being opened at Lurcher's house, his mistress insists that it is only a trick to bring another woman into the house, and refuses to be pacified until she sees her supposed rival safely buried. The party accordingly adjourn to the graveyard, where the fresh air revives Maria, who sits up in her coffin and scares away her captors. Maria then goes towards her home, and on the way meets the justice, who believing her to be a ghost, returns to his house and bars up his doors and windows in order to keep out, at the same time, any walking spirits and any demands for the return of Maria's dowry. Subsequently Lurcher and the little thief get into the house and persecute the justice, the former as a fury sent to destroy him, and the latter as an angel coming to preserve him. This scene and the following, in which they lead him to the churchyard under the pretence that he is dead and must be properly buried, though naturally partaking of exaggeration, are bright and terse and full of witty allusions, and in good hands would have played admirably. The comedy concludes with the union of Maria and her lover, a sentimental gentleman of a melancholy type, through the confession of the justice, that before his marriage with Maria he had been contracted to the little thief, whom he had deserted in view of obtaining the former's fortune. He acknowledges his pre-contract, in the presence of witnesses, and agrees to have it confirmed by holy church. The under plot mainly concerns itself with the domestics, but the adventures of Maria as the pretty night walker, who appears alternately as a ghost and as a Welsh maid, added to the tricks of the little thief, furnish ample materials for a comedy of which Pepys speaks as "a very merry and pretty play."¹

p. 38 Candlemass Day, 1664-5.—"THE CHANGES, OR LOVE IN A MAZE" (Loueina Maze), a comedy in five acts, by James Shirley.² (By the King's actors.)

Pepys describes it as a dull, silly play, which has little in it but Lacy's part of a countryman, which he did to admiration.³ A very successful play of this name by Dion Boucicault, which held the London stage for many years, and in which Alfred Wigan played the leading part, has no relation to this comedy either in plot or sentiment.

p. 65 Candlemass Day, 1667-8.—"THE COMICAL REVENGE, OR LOVE IN A TUB," a comedy in five acts by Sir George Ethertidge. (By the players of the Duke's house.)

This, which Pepys describes as a "silly play," "merry by gesture but not by wit,"⁴ seems to deserve the condemnation. Dufaur, a French valet, making love to a pert chambermaid, is made drunk, and while asleep is put into a tub, of which the bottom is knocked out, and he is left with his head through the top and his hands through the sides to roam about the stage. This incident has nothing to do with the real action of the play, and is introduced to give a low comedy touch to an otherwise serious and sentimental drama comprising love scenes and a duel. It is written mostly in verse, and the best part is that of a vivacious widow. Notwithstanding, however, the pooriness of the play, Betterton and his wife played the principal parts, and the company cleared £1,000 by the performance in the course of a month.⁵

⁶ "'Secret Love, or the Maiden Queen,' as it is acted by his Majesty's Servants

This celebrated play has the disadvantage of being not only in blank verse, but of having many important passages in rhyme, a method which prejudicially affects the natural flow of the language. This is particularly noticeable in the otherwise beautiful scenes between the queen and Philocles her lover. The plot is said to have been taken in part from some older writers, and in part to have been suggested by the king, who greatly admired it, and called it his play. It is very similar in construction to Scribe's well-known "Le Verre d'Eau," where queen Anne and Captain Masham occupy the respective positions of the Sicilian queen and Philocles, and the same scheme is adopted for the conclusion. Although the king claimed to have had a hand in the construction of the piece, he is understood to have objected to the mixture of broad comedy and serious drama as being inartistic. He also thought it liable to exception as treating the bond of marriage too lightly, in the love scenes between Florimel and Celadon, in the presence of the maiden queen. This, Dryden in his preface, submitting his judgment to that of the king, admits to have been a fault. In the conclusion he speaks of the "chief parts, both serious and comic, having been performed to the height of excellence." The great attraction of the piece, however, was the acting of Nell Gwyn in the part of Florimel, a maid of honour. She was then about nineteen years of age, and lived in Maypole Alley, leading from Newcastle Street to Drury Lane. A description of her standing at the door and watching the milkmaids on the 1st of May, 1667, dancing round the maypole, recently re-erected at the bottom of Newcastle Street, is to be found in Pepys's¹ diary. In the last act Florimel, wishing to thwart her lover Celadon in his attempted amours with two sisters Orinda and Sabina, disguises herself as a young nobleman and makes love to the two young ladies. Being challenged to fight with Celadon, she refuses and, instead of duelling, dances a jig. The "Maiden Queen" was brought out at the king's theatre on the 2nd February, 1666-7. The dialogue between Florimel and Celadon has been described as at the Theater Royal, written by John Dryden, Esq^r., London . . . 1669" A preface by Dryden dedicates the play to the king. When the play was printed the cast of the chief parts was as follows: Queen of Sicily, Mrs. Marshall; Arteria, her confidant, Mrs. Knepe; Florimel, a maid of honour, Mrs. Ellen Guyn; Lysimartes, prince of the blood, Mr. Burt; Philocles, Major Mohun; Celadon, Mr. Hart.

“a prize fight of wits.”¹ The play had a long run, and is criticized as follows by Pepys:²

“2nd March, 1666-7. After dinner with my wife to the king’s house to see the ‘Mayden Queene,’ a new play of Dryden’s, mightily commended for the regularity of it and the strain and wit: and the truth is there is a comical part done by Nell, which is Florimell, that I never can hope ever to see the like done again, by man or woman. The king and the Duke of York were at the play. But so great performance of a comical part was never, I believe, in the world before as Nell do this, both as a mad girle, then most and best of all when she comes in like a young gallant; and hath the motions and carriage of a spark the most that ever I saw any man have.”

p. 73 1668-9. “THE LITTLE FRENCH LAWYER,” a comedy, in five acts, by Beaumont and Fletcher.³ (By the King’s players.)

The leading part of this piece is La Witt, the little lawyer, who is forced against his will to put down his blue bag and take part as second in a duel. Thenceforth he neglects his affairs and becomes a fire-eater, challenging the judges who decide against his clients. It is a well-drawn and comical character, and the final catastrophe where he engages in a duel with an opposing lawyer and their seconds decamp with their masters’ clothes, leaving them stripped to the waist in the snow, too cold to use their weapons, is humorously dealt with. The scene is laid in Paris. This led Hallam to conjecture that “The Little French Lawyer” had its origin in some French novel or drama. On reflection, however, he was of opinion that it was derived from a Spanish source, whence Beaumont and Fletcher drew the plots of many of their plays.⁴

p. 73 Allhallows, 1670.—“SIR MARTIN MAR-ALL,” a comedy, in five acts, by John Dryden. (By the Duke’s players.)

This play was produced in 1667 and published in 1669. It is an adaptation of “L’Étourdi,” by Molière, and was a very successful work. It is an amusing production, but the comedy of the French writer is reduced to low comedy, bordering on farce, by the English adapter. The character of Lélie in Molière’s play is that of a blundering, inconsequential gentleman who, notwithstanding his unlucky blunders, gains the woman on whom he has set his affections. Sir

Martin Mar-all, on the other hand, is little better than a self-sufficient idiot, who ultimately marries the waiting maid, while Millicent, the lady, marries the valet. This result has been much and, I think, rightly censured. The French public would have been shocked at a man of family being married to a servant, and more than shocked at the spectacle of a young lady of wealth and good family disguising herself in order to marry a valet, who had never exhibited any inclination for her. The English public of the day would, I suppose, have been less scandalized at this result than at the melancholy spectacle of such a woman being thrown away upon a fool. Pepys, reflecting the tastes of the period, describes it as "mighty witty¹ and fullest of proper matter for mirth that ever was writ."

 "THE COMMITTEE," a comedy, in five acts, by Sir Robert Howard, p. 238
 K.B. (By the King's players.)

This play, which seems to have been a favourite with audiences of the restoration period, was published in 1665. The author, Sir Robert Howard, was a younger son of the Earl of Berkshire. His sister, Lady Elizabeth Howard, was married to John Dryden, who assisted Sir Robert in some of his literary efforts, and no doubt helped him to the position he attained as an author and dramatist. Evelyn² speaks of "The Committee" as a "ridiculous play," but agrees with Pepys that Lacey's Irish footman was "played to admiration." Pepys, who saw it in 1663, when Cromwell's daughter, then Lady Fauconbridge, was present in a box, thought it an indifferent play.³ In August, 1667, when Mrs. Knepp was one of the players, he liked it better.⁴ The rest of the cast is not mentioned. The scene is laid in London during the commonwealth, and deals with the iniquities of the committee for compounding or dealing with the sequestered estates of the royal party. Being produced after the restoration, it naturally favours the cavaliers. Mr. Day, chairman of the committee, and Mrs. Day, his wife, a scheming, vulgar, talkative woman, who has been raised from a position of domestic service to be the wife of the committee man, when she is addressed as "her ladyship," are not very interesting parts. Ruth, the daughter of a deceased cavalier, whose estates are being administered by Mr. Day, and whom they describe as their daughter, is a very bright and amusing part, which was played, I imagine, by Mrs. Knepp. The great attraction of the play, however, was an Irish servant named Teague. It appears to have been the first dramatic conception of an Irishman of the rollicking, faithful, and blundering type, made familiar to us now by a continued series of excellent actors. It is said that the original of the part was an Irishman in the service of the Howards, whose faithful blunders and eccentricities are worked out by Dryden. The play had considerable popularity, as appears from contemporary writers, and this is to some extent supported by the fact that it appears to have been acted at least thrice in the hall of the Inner Temple.¹ The plot, however, is wanting in originality, and there are no really fine passages in the text. Plays dealing with the affairs of the commonwealth are but few. They were probably, for many reasons, not very attractive. "The Roundheads, or the Good Old Cause," by Mrs. Aphra Behn,² dealt in scandalous fashion with Cromwell's widow and his daughters, and was even thus by no means successful.

p. 89 1st November, 1671.—"PHILASTER, OR LOVE LYES A BLEEDING," a comedy, in five acts, by Beaumont and Fletcher.³ (By the King's players.)

Philaster, heir to the throne of Sicily, and a popular favourite, is in love with Arethusa, daughter of the reigning king, who has promised her hand, and the succession to the throne, to the prince of Spain. The prince is drawn with all those frailties with which popular opinion in the seventeenth century debited a Spanish grandee. Philaster has in his service a page called Bellarion, who is, however, the daughter of a Sicilian noble. This young lady, rightly named Euphrasia, is, in performance of a vow, making a pilgrimage in man's attire, and by the same vow is forbidden to disclose her sex till the end of her pilgrimage. To facilitate his love-making with Arethusa, Philaster sends her Bellarion as an attendant, with the result that the confidence and affection naturally arising between the two women, give rise to doubts of Arethusa's chastity, and in these doubts Philaster, among others, is led to concur. The troubles and complications, arising from this equivocal position, fill the five acts of the play and provide powerful situations for both Philaster and Bellarion. Ultimately Bellarion meets her father, thus ending her pilgrimage. She declares herself. The Spanish pretender is driven off by the Sicilians. Philaster is recognized as rightful heir to the throne, is married to Arethusa, and the play ends in a short epilogue. The parts of Philaster and Bellarion are well and powerfully drawn. The language is in the best tone of the dramatists, and the interest in the play is well sustained throughout. Philaster, a part which had originally been played by Burbage,¹ was filled at this time by Betterton, and Bellarion was impersonated by Nell Gwyn. In this part she made a great success, although it is a serious and almost tragic rôle. From first to last there is no touch of comedy, much less of that species of farce in which from all accounts Nell was inimitable. Many of her speeches are long and would tax the powers of a thoughtful and experienced comedian. There is no love scene in which she is engaged, and no opportunity for a dance or a song. But her small and lissome figure, with a slight tendency to plumpness, her musical voice and clear intonation, with the charm invariably attaching to her style, must have made her a very fascinating boy.

The plot of "Philaster" is more improbable than would be agreeable to modern taste, while the motives and the sentiments of the several characters would now be regarded as somewhat overstrained. Notwithstanding, however, the somewhat qualified praise of Pepys,² who was "disappointed," and of Hallam³ who describes it as not first-rate, "Philaster" has always appeared to me a very charming play, and one of the best of the productions of Beaumont and Fletcher. It is admirable from a dramatic standpoint. As a literary work it is far above the level of the dramatists of the restoration, and not inferior to those of even a later era. Many of the lines are strikingly beautiful, and even Hallam admits that it contains "frequent sweetness of poetry."

p. 108 Candlemass, 1675-6, and 1st November, 1686.—"THE SPANISH
p. 244 CURATE," a comedy, in five acts, by Beaumont and Fletcher.¹ (By the King's players.)

The plot, which is laid in Spain, is not of a very interesting character, and is probably taken from some Spanish source. It has, however, some droll situations. Amongst these is a scene in which Lopez, the curate, and Diego, his sexton, call a meeting of the parishioners and upbraid them for their wilful neglect of the interests of the church in failing to marry, to have christenings, and to die, upon all of which occasions fees are payable to the curate and the clerk. After a colloquy carried on in mock solemnity, during which the curate and sexton announce their intended departure, the parishioners prevail on Lopez and Diego to remain, undertaking that the younger members of the flock shall marry and provide christenings, and that there shall be more funerals than of old. In another scene the curate, who is assisting Leandro in an intrigue with the wife of Bartolus, the parish lawyer, sends for the latter to make a will for Diego, who is put into bed and represented as dying. The parishioners assist in this function and take part in the instructions. By various devices the lawyer is thus kept away from his house while his place is supplied by the lady's lover.

Hallam speaks well of this play, and places it in the highest rank.² Pepys saw it twice, but apparently did not like it,³ though he speaks of it as a good play. The characters of Lopez, the curate, in this piece, of Sir Roger, the parson, in "The Scornful Lady," and of Dominic, the friar, in "The Spanish Friar," indicate the low social position which was occupied by the inferior ranks of the clergy in the seventeenth century.

though somewhat coarse in language. Addison admired it and admitted that the character of Vellum in "The Drummer" was taken from that of Savil in "The Scornful Lady."¹ Pepys saw it many times, but gives no description or opinion of the play.² The character of the scornful, sharp-tongued but affectionate lady is skilfully and effectively sustained throughout. Doll Common played Abigail, a vicious and intriguing chambermaid, and Mrs. Knepp a widow.³

Candlemas-day, 1681. Before the Lord Chancellor and Judges — "LONDON CUCKOLDS," a comedy, in five acts, by Edward Ravenscroft. (By the Duke's players.) p. 183

The author of this play was a member of the Middle Temple,⁴ who gave up the study of the law for dramatic composition. It was written in disparagement of the city, and was a counterblast to their disapproval of comedies and stage players. It was given for many years on each 9th of November (lord mayor's day), at both Covent Garden and Drury Lane. It is described in the "Life of James Quin"⁵ as "the most rank play that ever succeeded." It certainly cannot be contended that it is a decent play, but it must be admitted that it is amusing. Some of the actresses, however, after a time refused to perform any part in it, and in 1751 Garrick declared that it should never disgrace the boards of his theatre. From that date it has not been seen in London. It was given in our hall on grand day in February, 1681-2, a special allowance being made to the master of the revels. The lord chancellor (Lord Nottingham), a former member of the society, and many of the judges, with other distinguished persons, were present. As its first production was at the theatre in Dorset Gardens in 1682,⁶ the performance at our inn in February of that year was in the nature of a dress rehearsal, or at all events one of its very earliest representations. It was published later in 1682, "as it is acted at the Duke's theatre."⁷ It appears from this edition that Mrs. Barry, Mrs. Coror, and Mrs. Petty played the leading women's parts. The prologue was spoken by Mrs. Barry. The piece is not to be found in any editions of the plays of this period, and copies of it are scarce. The description given above is by no means exaggerated, and under the circumstances it is not surprising that our colleague's works have long since disappeared from the stage.

p. 183 On All Saints' Day, 1682, before the Judges.—“RULE A WIFE AND HAVE A WIFE,” a comedy, in five acts by Beaumont and Fletcher.¹ (By the Duke's players.)

This is founded on the same story as Shakespeare's “Catherine and Petruchio,” where a husband of humble position marries a headstrong and imperious woman of fortune and good family, and moulds her to his wishes by resolution, courage, and honesty of demeanour. It is not a very interesting play, but it gives good scope for acting in the principal parts, those of Leon, the husband, and Margarita, the wife. Betterton is said to have played the principal part, Michael Perce.² The under-plot, where an intriguing chambermaid takes in a money-hunting colonel, is said to be borrowed from Cervantes, but the type is common enough in plays of all countries, and the original idea is probably beyond the limits of inquiry. Pepys,³ who saw it in 1661, did not like it; but Hallam,⁴ discussing it as a literary work, speaks of the vigour of the characters and the vivacity of the humour, and thinks it must have required a powerful company to play it well.

This play, produced by Wycherley in 1674, and printed in 1676, has been the subject of much unfavourable criticism. There is hardly a character in the piece in which one can take an honest interest. It is said to have been partly founded on “Le Misanthrope” of Molière, and that the character of Fidelia, who follows her lover in boy's clothes, is taken from "Viola" in "Twelfth Night," but the distance in each case, between the foundation and the superstructure, is immense. The dedication "To my Lady B.," a noted procuress and plain-dealer, is perhaps the best part of the book.¹ William Wycherley's father, Daniel, was a barrister of this inn, to which the author was admitted in 1659 at the age of 19. In 1662 he was appointed controller for the christmas. His portrait by Lely in 1668 presents him as a handsome young man. It was engraved in 1703, and, according to Pope, Wycherley, then aged 64, in sickness and in penury, himself suggested the motto, "quantum mutatus ab illo."²

1st November, 1684, Allhallows-day.—"THE FOND HUSBAND, OR THE PLOTTING SISTERS," a comedy, in five acts, by T. Durfey. (By the players of the Duke's house.)

Tom Durfey's various productions were popular at the time, and this was probably one of his best.³ It was licensed in June, 1676, and was played as late as 15th June, 1713, when Richard Steele, having induced the management of Drury Lane to produce it for the author's benefit, recommended the public to visit it and to support "my old friend, Tom Durfey." Charles II. witnessed the comedy on three of the first five nights of its performance.

4th November, 1685.—"THE SOLDIER'S FORTUNE," a comedy, in five acts, by Thomas Otway. (By Mr. Davenant's players.)

This play was written by Otway after his return from Flanders, where he was an officer in the Duke of Monmouth's regiment. It was produced in 1681, Betterton⁴ and Mrs. Barry playing the principal parts. It is a grossly indecent play, which is said to have taken "extraordinarily well." The charge of indecency is, however, combatted by Mrs. Aphra Behn, who professes to be shocked at the pruriency of women who are ready to see indecency in it.⁵

to the "Spanish Curate" by Beaumont and Fletcher, inasmuch as the character of Lopez, the curate in the latter, resembles that of Dominic, the friar, in the former. In both he is represented as a sensual, scandalous priest, who easily lends himself, in consideration of liberal doles, to an intrigue by the young wife of an old usurer with a gallant lover. It must be admitted, however, that the Dominic of Dryden is by far the more entertaining ecclesiastic of the two. The serious portion of the play, where Torrismond, a valiant and honest soldier, in love with Leonora, queen of Arragon, is opposed by Bertram, a prince of the blood, also a courtier of the queen, is marred by the tacit assent given by the queen to the murder of the captive king in order to secure her marriage with Torrismond. The scenes between him and the queen, and indeed every scene in which either is on the boards, is finely written and impressive, and the "Spanish Friar" may, I think, be fairly described as the best of Dryden's plays. The climax, when it appears that Bertrand had not carried out the murder and that the king still lives, does not altogether relieve the unpleasant effect of the situation previously created, although the queen's penitence and proposed retirement enlist sympathy with her. The intrigue between Elvira, the usurer's wife, and Lorenzo, a colonel in the queen's army, is interrupted by various comical devices, and is ultimately put an end to, when they are in the act of eloping, by the discovery that they are brother and sister—a catastrophe which would not be altogether to the taste of the present day, although it was apparently not objected to in the seventeenth or eighteenth centuries. The play was prohibited at court by James II. on the ground of its treatment of the roman catholic priesthood. After the revolution it was the first piece commanded by queen Mary, who, in 1689, was present at its performance. The choice was unfortunate, for the play abounds in expressions which were hailed by the jacobites as applying to her conduct towards the deposed king, her father, and unpleasant comments were made upon her encouraging a drama which was said to be a slander upon the roman catholic religion, his attachment to which had cost her father a throne.¹ But Mary had been away from England for many years before her accession and probably knew little, if anything, of the plays then in vogue. Her distress during the representation, which was followed by a continued enmity to Dryden, then leagued with her enemies, whom she suspected of having brought about her discomfiture, sufficiently shows that she had not been previously made aware of the character of the piece.¹

1st November, 1687.—“THE CHEATS OF SCAPIN,” a comedy, in five acts, by T. Otway. (By players engaged by Mr. Davenant.) p. 253

This play is an adaptation of “Les Fourberies de Scapin,” by Molière.

The revolution of 1688, which, without bloodshed, put William and Mary upon the throne, is followed by a considerable diminution in the interest of our records. Trials for high treason, which had been frequent during the previous reigns, no longer occupied the same prominent position. Judges, paid by fixed salaries, and irremovable except by a resolution of the two houses of parliament, were no longer subject to the influence of the throne. Parliament having assumed control of the general administration of the country, the crown no longer interfered in the private affairs of its subjects or in those of the inns of court. One great lawyer and independent judge, Sir John Holt, occupied the post of lord chief justice from the accession of William and Mary for a period of twenty-one years. At the same time a great and immediate accession of business is recognized. Our parliament and bench table orders become so numerous and so voluminous that, as will be observed, it has been necessary to re-arrange the principle upon which they are set out, and by, what I hope will be considered, judicious curtailments, to render them available for the purpose of these calendars. The civil war had been followed by visitations of pestilence and of fire, which endangered and crippled our society. Plots, a threatened outbreak of a second civil war, an arbitrary and unconstitutional reign followed by an informal abdication, had distracted the country. And now that England had settled down to, what it hoped would prove, the establishment of public peace and national prosperity, our society joined in the general aspiration and proceeded to set its house in order. One of the early steps was to introduce a more businesslike system than heretofore by regulating the duties, emoluments and privileges of the treasurer, the under treasurer, the benchers and other officials of the inn. It had been decided in 1682, that there should be a permanent under-treasurer whose duties, then defined, were from time to time extended as business increased. In June, 1691, the earliest orders as to the treasurer appear in the minutes. Up to this date, as will have been remarked, a treasurer was often re-elected for several years, especially if he were one of the law officers, as had recently happened in the case of Sir Heneage Finch, afterwards lord chancellor. By the new orders, which are still in force, the treasurer was elected annually in Michaelmas term, for one year only, and not to be elected again until each bencher had served his turn according to his seniority. The treasurer's emoluments, arising from fees and otherwise, had hitherto been varying and uncertain. It was now declared that each treasurer should be allowed the sum of £100 for the duties of his office. He was not to claim any further or other recompense or allowance,¹ and was prohibited spending any sum exceeding £5 from the funds of the society without the leave of the bench. By a further order, the question of precedence was settled strictly according to seniority of election, except in the cases of the attorney and solicitor general, who, while in office, were allowed precedence. King's counsel, as such, were given no rights of precedence. The choice of bench chambers, at a parliament, was also declared to be according to seniority, beginning with the treasurer, and that no bencher should be eligible for such choice, unless he had been personally present at the bench table, and had dined twice in each of the two terms immediately preceding. Exceptions were, however, made in favour of members of parliament, who in the interest of their constituents were not required to keep these terms. With regard to appointments to the staff of the society, which had hitherto apparently been in the gift of the treasurer, it was ordered that the under-treasurer, the steward, and the chief butler should always be appointed by the bench table and confirmed by a parliament. Other servants (except the cook) if their places fell vacant in term time were to be selected by the bench, but, if in vacation, then by the treasurer. The head cook's place, however, was specially declared to be in the gift of the treasurer, whether the vacancy occurred in or out of term. All orders of the bench were to be regularly entered by the under-treasurer, and the accounts of the treasurer and others to be duly audited. Payments to the officers of the house, other than the under-treasurer, on a call to the bar, were settled in June, 1697, at £2 14s. 6d., inclusive of 5s. to the treasurer's clerk, but exclusive of 10s. to the under-treasurer. Those on a call to the bench were left as before. Twenty sets of chambers and no more were allotted to the benchers, and arrangements were made, from time to time, to pay for their repairs out of the funds of the house. Substantial sums were allowed to certain benchers on account of the expenses of their chambers in February, 1693, and in 1700, the treasurer, John Clendon, was allowed £50 towards his repairs. Bench chambers were also repaired at the cost of the inn after the great storm in 1704, and further orders were made in 1708.

About this time also, November, 1692, it was contemplated to "transfer the interest of both Temples to trustees of both societies," and the treasurer was directed to confer with his brother of the Middle Temple and report the result to the inn. There is no such report extant, but the question was revived in June, 1695, when a resolution was passed "that a conference be desired with the Middle Temple touching the lodging of the freehold of both Houses in an equal number of each House." Nothing, however, was done in this direction until 1732, when a deed of arrangement, and to some extent of partition, was executed, by which the limits of the two societies were finally determined.

I do not find any special orders or proposals for improving or enforcing the study of the law. Students still learned their law at moots and at lectures, by sitting in court, and, most important of all, by regular study and attendance in barristers' chambers, followed by imparlance, or by meetings or conferences to discuss among themselves the various points which had arisen during the day.

The bench continued to exercise their antient jurisdiction over the several inns of chancery, for which readers were regularly appointed. The principal and antients of Clement's Inn were summoned, in November, 1689, to show cause why they were not in commons. Edward Gerrard, the principal, was ordered, in

 p. 302 inns of chancery. In November, 1693, the treasurer of Lyon's Inn was summoned to show cause why he did not attend the reader
 p. 311 appointed by this society. In March, 1693-4, an order was issued that the treasurer and antients of Lyon's Inn do inquire what reputed papists or "non-jurats" have chambers in the society, and return their names to her majesty's commissioners in the Inner Temple library on 24th March.

A memorandum, dated 25th January, 1689-90, refers to the case
 p. 321 of William Fry at Gray's Inn. This gentleman was a member of the society, and complained to the judges that he had been passed over in calls to the bench. His appeal was heard by Chief Justice Holt, Justice Gregory, and Barons Nevill and Turton. They decided that it was discretionary with the benchers as to the person and the time when they would call to the bench: and that they could not be required to assign any reason for their refusal to call any person to the bench, although if they had called and then disbenched him they could be summoned to give their reason for such
 p. 363 disbenching.¹ On Friday, 7th February, 1700-1, an entertainment was given to the treasurer and benchers of Gray's Inn. The hour appointed was six o'clock in the afternoon, when the guests were received by torchlight and entertained with canary for about half an hour till the supper was ready in the library, and were then treated to "a very handsome supper and plenty of Burgundy wine." The festivities were prolonged until midnight, when the porters prepared coaches for the masters of Gray's Inn and brought them to the hall steps. The occasion of this unique act of hospitality is not recorded.

The garden and the general appearance of the inn, which had been much considered under the commonwealth, was neglected after the restoration. Beyond the payment of the gardeners' wages and sums for paving the summerhouse and for new flower pots, little, if anything, appears to have been spent on the garden for a period of over twenty-eight years. After the accession of the new king and queen attention was again directed to its improvement, and it rapidly assumed the appearance of a formal garden according to the then prevailing taste. In 1689, King's Bench Walk was newly planted with chestnut and lime trees. In the following year the walks were newly gravelled at a cost of £203 10s., and an alehouse kept by the gardener within the garden was shut up. A wall near the King's Bench office was lowered to the level of the garden wall next the Thames, and the bricks thus obtained were used to build a greenhouse. The Alienation office having disappeared in the great fire, possession of the garden, which lay between the King's Bench office and Serjeants' Inn, was resumed by the society. In 1693 it was taken in hand by the benchers and converted into a private garden, of which each bencher had a key. It was called the "bencher's garden," the "privy garden," or the "little garden," to distinguish it from the great garden abutting on the river. Some elms, which had formerly obstructed the view from Serjeants' Inn, were cut down. Walks were made with broken shell, grass plats were laid down, and a fountain with a lion's face and a copper scallop shell to receive the water, was erected in the centre, under a copper cherry tree with spreading branches. Bulbs were planted which, with rows of orange trees in tubs, gave it the appearance of a dutch garden. In 1696, it was again put in order at a cost of £30, a sun-dial was set up, water was laid on, a tiled summer house was built, and it became the subject of much attention from the masters of the bench. The great garden also underwent a similar transformation. The walks were newly laid with cockle shells. Jessamines, peaches, "nectrons," cherries and plum trees were supplied, and every year sums of money were devoted to it. Numerous elm and lime trees were planted in rows, and others which interfered with the symmetry of the broad walks were cut down. Standard laurels, junipers, hollies and box trees were planted. Under the treasurership of Sir Simon Harcourt (afterwards lord chancellor) the garden was ornamented with fifteen yew trees in pots, and the beds were filled with jonquils, tulips, yellow dutch

These were carried to Islington for the winter, and returned to the Temple in the summer until 1705, when a glass covered shed was constructed for their protection. In 1707 a pedestal for the dial on the great garden steps was supplied, at a cost of £25, by Edward Strong. This was the contractor for S. Paul's, which he built under Wren's superintendence.

By the end of the seventeenth century the inn had become well supplied with taverns and coffee houses in its immediate vicinity. The Devil tavern, as already mentioned, was a source of continual trouble to the society. The Fountain tavern at the Temple Gate, formerly the Prince's Arms, of which Southerby was landlord and
 p. 294 Dixon tenant, had opened windows into Inner Temple lane without
 p. 340 the leave of the society. These were in May, 1698, stopped up
 p. 341 by order of the house, and were reopened only upon Dixon acknowledging the right of the society to stop his lights and agreeing to pay 2s. 6d. per annum as an acknowledgment and a rent, to "keep apart for the use of the masters of the bench the best room in his house upon any public show or occasion," and to sign the entry in the records. This arrangement was duly carried out, and payments will be found in respect of refreshments supplied to the benchers when occupying a room at the Fountain to witness the proclamation of queen Anne and her visit to the city. The Rainbow coffee house in Fleet Street, which had formerly belonged to Farr, and afterwards to his widow, under the name of Farr's coffee house, had windows looking into Inner Temple Lane, and others looking into Hare Court, and for these a payment was made by
 p. 271 Hargrove, the tenant, of 6s. 8d. and 2s. a year respectively. The
 p. 263 windows in the Inner Temple Lane were to be obscured by lattices, and the rooms in the basement to be used only as cellars. The Star was at the Inner Temple gate. This vintner was summoned before the bench table in May, 1689, for causing a nuisance by his bar bells, etc. On promise of future good conduct he was dismissed.
 p. 238 The Mitre tavern was outside the entrance to Mitre Court buildings. Hall's coffee house was at the Whitefriars gate. On the occasion of a fire at this house in 1686 a sum of £4 was paid by us to the servants of "the Insurance Office and Friendly Society" for their help in preserving the Temple buildings from the conflagration which was sufficiently near to be a source of considerable danger.¹ The Horn tavern, where the two treasurers met in 1707, "about the church," was on the other side of Fleet Street, and is now known as Anderton's hotel. There were, also, in close proximity to both gateways, a considerable number of taverns and coffee houses not actually mentioned in our books. The Palsgrave Head was on the site now occupied by Lloyd's Bank. Its occupant issued a $\frac{1}{2}d.$ token having, on the obverse, the figure of a man in armour wearing a full wig and holding in his left hand a short sword or baton, with an inscription, THE PALSGRAV HEAD TAVERN. The reverse had, in the field, HER HALFE PENNY D.D., inscribed WITHOVT · TEMPLE · BARR. Dick's coffee house was opened about 1688. The Hercules' Pillars, a house much frequented by Pepys and his friends, as well as by the counsellors of the Temple, was between the Inner Temple gate-house and Serjeants' Inn. The proprietor of this house issued a $\frac{1}{2}d.$ token, having, on the obverse, a figure of Hercules with a pillar in each hand, with the inscription, THE HERCULUS PILLERS; on the reverse, the initials I. M. S. and the inscription IN FLEET STREETE. There were also others, including The Cock, too numerous to mention. The Devil tavern or, according to its correct name, The Dunstan and Devil tavern, one of the oldest in London, was down an alley to the west of the Middle Temple gateway, and occupied the spot known, from 1787 to 1879, as Childs' Place. About the latter date it was taken into Childs' bank. It faced the windows looking westward from Hare Court. Tokens were issued in 1658 by John Simon Wadlow, the proprietor, with the following inscription on the obverse: AT THE D[EVIL] AND DUNSTAN'S, with S. Dunstan holding the devil by the nose: on the reverse, WITHIN TEMPLE BARRE, with the initials J. S. W. From a drawing by Cleghorne in 1746, its sign, hanging from an iron stanchion into Fleet Street, displayed S. Dunstan sitting in a chair gazing at his crucible, with the devil, as a black man, looking over his shoulder and grinning. The devil, however, had long since supplanted the saint in public estimation, and driven him out of the partnership, as the tavern had, even from the time of Ben Jonson, been known by the name of The Devil, and later on as The Old Devil to distinguish it from The New Devil, started on the opposite side of the road about 1689.¹ In 1666 James Farr of The Rainbow issued a token, with the inscription on the obverse: JAMES FARR, 1666, with a rainbow based on clouds; on the reverse, IN FLEET STREET: HIS HALF-PENNY. He had formerly kept a coffee house, being the second house of that character opened in London. In respect of this house he was prosecuted in 1657 for annoying his neighbours by "evil smells" in "making of a drink called coffee," and setting fire to his chimney to the danger of Daniel Pakeman of the Rainbow. He seems after this to have acquired The Rainbow, where he issued his tokens and made a considerable fortune.²

p. 309 Jeffryes' portrait having been removed from the hall in February, 1693-4, the treasurer was ordered in June of that year to provide the portraits of king William and queen Mary, "to be set up in the hall." A commission was accordingly given to Sir Godfrey Kneller, and the portraits, now in our hall, were painted by him at a cost

p. 310 (including the frames) of £60. At the same time that the monarchs of the revolution were thus honoured, the portraits of those old champions of the law, Sir Edward Coke and Sir Thomas Littleton,

p. 315 were reframed by "Driver, the picture frame maker," at a cost of

p. 320 £8, and were hung up in the hall with "hooks and rings, with plates, p. 321 screws, and nails." The queen's portrait, however, was not long in the hall before she passed away. It was placed there after the long vacation of 1694, and in December of that year her majesty was attacked by small pox, to which, after a short illness, she succumbed.

Her eulogy, which was pronounced in the Temple church by the master, Dr. William Sherlock, dean of St. Paul's, is considered a masterpiece of style as a funeral oration. It was, however, after the fashion of the times, made the subject of violent attacks by journalists and preachers opposed to the revolution.

The pound piece, which under the name of a "guinea," being made of fine gold from New Guinea, was first issued in March, 1663,¹ became a source of trouble which culminated in the reign of king William and was dealt with by the Recoinage Act.² Owing to the continued depreciation in value of silver coins from clipping and other causes, the guinea had become of the value of thirty shillings, at which price it was accepted in payment of taxes and other government charges. The Recoinage Act had fixed the highest price of a guinea at twenty-two shillings, at which value it would be accepted by the government on and after the 4th May, 1696. The effect of these new regulations appears in our accounts for 1695-6. In accordance with an order of the bench that this house should bear the loss on the fall in value of the guineas, the under-treasurer was allowed £45 12s. on 114 guineas which had fallen from thirty to twenty-two shillings, £10 on 25 guineas at a loss of eight shillings per guinea, and £1 6s. on 6½ guineas at a loss of four shillings per guinea. The exact dates of these allowances are not given, but as the 4th May was the last day upon which clipped silver would be received at all by the government, and as the new coinage was being rapidly issued, they may fairly be assumed to have been of some date between the passing of the act in January and the 4th May, 1696.³

The supplying of good and sufficient water to the inn had been effected in 1619 under the auspices of Sir Hugh Middleton. A system of lighting the courts and passages of the inn was undertaken during the reign of king William. Soon after the great fire of 1666 various schemes were tried, and patents were granted to Reeves, Vernatty, Lyndus, and others, for the proper lighting of streets and other public and private places.¹ None of these plans appear to have commended themselves to our society until after the year 1694, when, according to Knight,² a licence was granted by the corporation to certain persons interested in "glass lights, commonly called or known by the name of convex lights," for the sole supply of the public lights in all public places in the city for

p. 351 twenty-one years. Taking advantage of this new scheme, our benchers in 1698-9 contracted with the proprietors of the convex lights for lighting the society, with sixteen lamps for a year, at £40.

p. 368 The light was also tried in 1702 in a glass lamp in the church, but it was not successful, and was taken down and sent back to the

p. 412 proprietors. A better fate attended the lights in a branch brass candlestick in the hall, which was put up in 1708. In July, 1704, Richard Cole patented "an extraordinary way or invention of forming glasses in conical figures and lamps, to be used not only in streets and other public and private places but also in mines and quarries underground and in ships at sea." The convex lights not

p. 432 being apparently satisfactory, the bench, in 1711, tried the conical lights and agreed with the proprietors for lighting the inn, by their system, at £40 a year. Under this contract the inn continued to be lighted until the end of the reign of queen Anne.

The exterior of the church having been put into thorough repair, and the interior having been decorated under Charles II. and James II., there was little need for expenditure during the succeeding reigns. Some miscellaneous entries, however, relating to the church and its services may be interesting. The night burials, which were frequent under the commonwealth and previously, continued for some few years after the restoration, but ceased, so far as they are recorded, after the death of Dr. Ball in 1684. Sums were pp. 271, 320 paid, apparently for the first time in 1689, for the decoration of the

p. 291 1692 the master was requested to cause "his most pious and loyal sermon, preached on Sunday last," to be printed. In 1700 the psalms of Brady and Tate were substituted for the older psalter of a cost of £1. Places in the church were kept for the ladies, and orders were given not to admit Mrs. Green, the glazier's granddaughter, nor any inferior persons to the ladies' seats. The price of sermons appears from the accounts to have gone up from 10s. each in 1614, to 40s. each in 1699. In 1704 eight new common prayer books, in folio, for the church, cost £6, the old books being distributed among the members of the inn. In October of the same year it was ordered, that prayers be read in the Temple church every morning except sundays and holy days, as well in term time as in vacation, at 8 a.m.

A small amount was from time to time expended on necessary repairs to the church, but nothing substantial was done until the treasurership of Nicholas Courtenay, 1694-5. During this period a sum, amounting altogether to about £230, was paid by this society as their proportion of the outlay. There is no description of the work, but it appears from the "New View of London,"¹ that the south-west exterior was newly built with stone and the following inscription set upon the walls :

RESTITUTUM.

NICH: C[OURTNEY] }
ROGERO BELLINGHAM } ARM: THESAUR "

On the 26th and 27th of November, 1703, a terrific hurricane, only approached in intensity by the storm which raged through all Europe on the 3rd of September, 1658, the day of Cromwell's death, swept the whole face of England. It damaged property, in London alone, to the amount of over £2,000,000. It destroyed great quantities of shipping and wrecked the Eddystone lighthouse, and it had its natural effect on our inn. Numerous entries show the damage done to our tenements, including the master's house, which suffered severely, and was restored at the cost of the two societies. Like, however, the great fires of the seventeenth century, the "Great Storm," as it is called, had no evil effect upon the structure of our church, which thus escaped the hurricane as it had escaped the conflagration. In February, 1703-4, further and other repairs to the church became necessary, and it was agreed to

p. 385 join with the Middle Temple in the necessary cost. The work does not appear to have been very pressing, and it was not, in fact, undertaken until 1705-6, when, according to the "New View of London,"¹ the interior was newly whitewashed, gilt and painted, and the pillars of the round portion were wainscotted. A new battlement and buttresses were added on the southern side, the east end

p. 407 of the church was mended with stone, and other parts of the outside were effectively repaired. The figures of the knights were once more cleaned and painted, and the iron work inclosing them was painted

p. 406 and gilt. The amount expended according to the accounts for 1706-7 was, for our share, about £605, including the erection of a new

p. 407 "cupilow," or cupola for the saints bell at the south side of the church. A "knight templar" was also mended with plaster of Paris, at a cost of 4*s*½.

In the course of the year 1705-6, not long after the appointment of Dr. Thomas Sherlock to the mastership, questions arose as to the respective positions of the master and the benchers of the two societies, principally in reference to the fees to be taken on burials. The patent of 1608, which put the benchers into possession of the entire soil of the Temple, and imposed upon them certain obligations in regard to the church, left the position of the master somewhat undefined. Dr. Micklethwaite made claims of an excessive and unreasonable character, which were not allowed by the benchers, and, on his appeal to the privy council, were not sustained. Dr. Sherlock, a man in sympathy with the Temple, found his position also in many respects unsatisfactory. After some discussion a committee was appointed, consisting of five benchers of each society.

Vol. ii., p. 171

p. 402 They reported on the 6th June, 1706,² as to the fees taken in former times, and at the date of their report, for the soil and for the service. For the soil, the fees formerly varied from £2 in the chancel above the steps, to 10*s*½. in the round walk and elsewhere below the chancel and aisle, and for the service 5*s*½. to the curate, 4*s*½. to the clerk, and 3*s*½. 4*d*. to the gravemaker. At the time of the report the rates were, in the round, for the soil £1, for the service, to the master, 10*s*½., to the clerk, 5*s*½., to the sexton, 2*s*½. 6*d*. For other burials the rates for the soil varied from 10*s*½. to £3, the curate, the clerk and the sexton taking the respective fees of 5sh., 4sh., and 3sh. 4d. They also reported that it lay upon the master to supply the church, at his own cost, with a minister or reader, and a clerk or sexton, and to officiate daily in the church, either in person or by deputy. That the Inner House had ordered a payment of £100 per annum to be made to Dr. Ball, and subsequently to Dr. W. Sherlock, which had regularly been paid, the Middle Temple, in like terms, ordering a payment of £70 per annum. But that these were voluntary payments, and remained in force so long only as the respective societies were agreeable thereto. This report was affirmed by the benchers of the two societies in 1607. The burials, however, decreased annually in number, and the question seems thus to have been set at rest. We have no copy of Dr. Sherlock's patent, under which it was said that the master was bound to provide at his own expense a reader and a clerk. There is, however, among the "Miscellanea"¹ a copy of the patent granted to Dr. Benson in October, 1826. This appoints him master of the New Temple, and "in consideration of daily service and duty to be celebrated in the said church," gives him all profits and advantages arising therefrom "in as ample manner and form as Dr. Ball, Dr. William Sherlock and Dr. Thomas Sherlock . . . enjoyed the same," together with an annuity of £37 6s. 8d., to be paid out of the exchequer. It proceeds :

"We will nevertheless and our intention is that the said Christopher Benson shall from time to time find one Priest, Presbiter or Minister to administer and serve in all and all manner of Divine Services and offices belonging to such Minister within the church aforesaid. And to administer or cause to be administered the Sacrament to all and singular persons residing within the New Temple as often as need shall be. And also one other man called Clerk and Sexton to attend, observe, and execute all and singular matters and things which belong and appertain to such offices within our said church, and that only at the cost, charges and expence of him the said Christopher Benson."

It would seem, therefore, that the patent issued to Dr. Thomas Sherlock was in the same form as that under which Dr. Benson and his predecessors held the office, and that the societies of the Temple not only acted in a voluntary spirit in making the yearly allowance to the master, but also in defraying the expenses of the reader or curate, the clerk and the sexton. This cost they have uniformly borne from the time of king James I.

p. 373 Queen Anne came to the throne in March, 1702. In Michaelmas term of that year it was unanimously agreed that the treasurer, Sir Simon Harcourt, should cause her majesty's portrait to be painted and placed in the hall. This commission he entrusted to Sir Godfrey Kneller, who had finished the work early in the following year. On p. 377 the 28th January he was paid £80, and the picture now in our possession was placed in the hall. In September, 1709, Sir James Thornhill, who was then in high favour with the queen, painted for p. 417 the hall of our society, at the price of £70, the picture of Pegasus, surrounded by Neptune and the Muses, springing from Mount p. 442 Helicon. The arrangement of the pictures in the hall at the death of queen Anne was as follows. At the east end of the hall the queen was in the centre, with William and Mary, and the two judges, Coke and Littleton, on either side. Towards the western end was a screen, beyond the screen the music room or gallery, and over that Sir James Thornhill's picture, which fitted the upper part of the western wall.¹

The difficulty arising from the multitude of strangers within the inn, which had been felt during and since the commonwealth, had become more pronounced after the restoration, and stringent orders were made, from time to time, for their expulsion. Before the accession of queen Anne the number of these objectionable persons had considerably decreased, in consequence, as I presume, of the stricter and more business-like mode in which the affairs of the society had been conducted. It was probably owing in some measure to this, as well as to other causes, that the financial position of the inn had, by 1704, become very unsatisfactory. In order to relieve the pressure, fifteen members of the bench joined with the treasurer in p. 386 advancing £50 each, without interest, towards paying the debts of the house. This £800 was to be repaid as and when the arrears of commons and other duties should be received. Payments were pp. 398-440 also made by gentlemen, on their call, towards the expenses of the organ. The sums varied, between 1706 and 1714, from £18 to £36.

pp. 330, 342, 350, 356 For various reasons grand day had not been kept in several terms during the later years of the reign of William III., and the entertainments, after the peace of Ryswick in November, 1697, appear to have been reduced in number and in cost. An attempt was made to relieve this dulness and to revive in the hall some of the old customs. Thus, the players were more frequently in attendance,¹ and it was desired by some of the bench to restore the old practice of dancing in the hall. As the old regulations were presumably still in force, several members were called up to the table for not dancing on grand night in the previous Michaelmas term, and fines pro non saltando were imposed. These were afterwards remitted, but in November, 1704, it was ordered that the antient exercise of dancing be revived, and that "for non-performance the usual ameracements be imposed." This revival, in the reign of queen Anne, of the customs of the time of queen Elizabeth, does not appear to have been very successful. It was certainly not in accordance with the sentiment of the day, when the dancing men probably preferred the society of ladies, pro saltando, to that of each other. Nor was this formal dancing publicly regarded with much favour. In the "Virtuoso," a comedy by Shadwell, published about the date of these orders of revival, the solemn and grave motions of the benchers dancing at their revels are dealt with as a common topic of derision.²

About this time also a scheme, which had previously been propounded and favourably received, was finally adopted. By this arrangement the steward undertook the catering for the hall, providing all necessary food, and taking for his payment the commons then paid, with certain allowances for grand days and other special occasions. The gentlemen messed either three or four together, "as formerly in this society," and gave their names to the butler as they came into commons and went out. The manciple with his duties thus came to an end, and the provisioning of the society was done by contract. In 1708 a new steward (Trowell) was appointed under new conditions. He apparently undertook to make annual payments to the house in consideration of his post. The price of provisions, however, rose considerably after this year, and, in consequence of application by him on this ground, he was in 1709 remitted

p. 427 £50 of the payments due from him, and in 1710 he was remitted pp. 438, 439 £100. In 1713 a committee was appointed to go through the steward's accounts, to see what contract ought to be made with him and what he ought to be paid.

The insistence on the privileges of the Temple, as an antient sanctuary, was maintained after the revolution as it had been under James I. and Charles II. In August, 1697, a debtor from Cornwall, named Humphrey Borlase, who had been arrested within the Inner Temple, was rescued by the members of our society, who resisted the officers and caused a great hubbub, in the course of which several persons were wounded.¹ This being reported to the benchers, an
 p. 336 order was passed "That this society will maintain the antient privileges of the House and defend the prosecution against the persons concerned in the pretended rescue of Humphrey Borlase, p. 338 Esquire." Their intervention appears to have been to some extent successful, as the indictments were quashed, at a cost to the inn of £46 10s. 8d. An action having been brought in Michaelmas term against the debtor and others,² and motion made to hold the defendants to special bail in £400, the lord chief justice (Sir J. Holt) held that although the Temples were extra parochial and not in the city of London or its franchise, yet they were in the county of London and within the reach of justice, citing cases where felonies had been committed in the Temple and the felons convicted at the Old Bailey. As to executing of fi-fa or arresting of the students of the Temple, he said there should be due regard paid to the inns of court and the members of the inn, but not to be extended to persons who came thither by fraud and sheltered themselves there with an intent and purpose to cheat their creditors: and finding that the defendant Borlase came from Gray's Inn with this purpose, irregularly and without any certificate from the treasurer, as there should have been, the defendants were ruled to find special bail, which was afterwards fixed at £200. This result appears to have been regarded as establishing the claim of the templars, for I find during the reign of queen Anne that, on two occasions, permission was solicited of the benchers and granted by them under special conditions, to arrest a debtor within the precincts of the Temple. In neither case, however, was the debtor a member of our society, and in each case he was served with notice of the intended arrest.

William Petyt, whose services to the society in 1669 have already been mentioned, died in October, 1707, at the age of 71,¹ and was buried in the Temple church. He had served the several offices of the inn, having been bencher in 1689, reader in 1694, and treasurer in 1701-2. His name appears frequently on committees, and he took great interest in our affairs. During the course of his long career, for many years of which he was keeper of the records in the tower of London, he had made an extensive and valuable collection of antient MSS., among them being original letters of kings and queens of this country, of diplomatists, of foreign agents, and of other distinguished persons. These were kept in the Inner Temple, where they still remain. He had also caused copies to be made of the journals of parliament, of certain royal charters, and of other legal and historical documents to which his official position had given him access. At the time of Petyt's death, and for many succeeding generations, these MSS. were invaluable to the historian and the antiquary. Of late years, however, the labours of the master of the rolls, and his assistants in the record office, of the commissioners of public records, of the historical MSS. commission, and of other public bodies, have deprived Petyt's collections of their special value. Among his papers are a series of letters which passed between roman catholics in England, during the reign of queen Elizabeth, throwing an interesting light upon the inner life of the catholic community at that period. By his will, which was dated 12th July, 1705, he left certain of his MSS. and books, which are set out in our under-treasurer's receipt, in trust that they should be kept together for the public use in a proper place, towards the procurement of which he left a sum of £150, to be employed at the discretion of his executors. He also bequeathed £50 to each of the societies of the Temple for the purchase of books for their respective libraries. His brother and executor, Sylvester Petyt, principal of Barnard's inn, acting under the powers of the will, transferred to the benchers of the Inner Temple the entire collection;

 p. 417 together with a sum of £150 towards the completion of a new or additional library, which they then had in contemplation. A pay-
 p. 393 ment, in November, 1705, of £20 5s. for the carving in the library during the treasurership of Thomas Walker, indicates the room then used as a second library. The fine carving over the fireplace (believed to be the work of Grinling Gibbons), bears the inscription,

T. THOMA WALKER ARM: A.D. 1705, which sufficiently identifies it as the subject of this payment. In

 p. 411 1708-9 £50 paid to Cordwell the carpenter on account of his contract to build a new library, and a further payment of £100 on
 p. 425 account, in 1709-10, show that Petyt's legacy was employed in the construction of a library other than that in existence in 1705. In this room, fitted throughout with bookcases and used as a library, Petyt's MSS., under lock and key, reposed for many generations.
 Our obligations to Petyt do not cease with the gift of his books and his MSS. and his contribution towards the construction of a new library. We have, at the present time, in addition to our law library, consisting of some 26,000 volumes, a library of general history and literature. This comprises about 35,000 volumes, duly catalogued.
 It includes histories of all countries, county histories, books on theology, architecture, painting, the fine arts, and every class of
 p. 416 work essential to a complete general library. The acquisition and arrangement of Petyt's books and MSS. were followed by the appointment, in June, 1709, of a librarian or library keeper, at a yearly p. 417 salary of £20. Mr. Samuel Carter, the first holder of this office, was required to find two sureties in the sum of £1,000, and to attend in the library, from Lady day to Michaelmas, from 9 a.m. to noon and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m., and from Michaelmas to Lady day, from 10 a.m. to noon, and from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. In 1713, p. 438 Joshua Blew having succeeded Mr. Carter as keeper of the library, an order was made by the bench that "the treasurer for the time being do lay out £20 yearly out of the treasury in purchasing of books for the library." This accession of works of general interest in 1708, together with the means of harbouring them in a suitable place, thus formed the nucleus, if not the foundation, of the valuable library which our society now possesses.

A portrait of William Petyt has hung for many generations in our parliament chamber. It represents him in a garb, probably that of keeper of the tower records. One hand holds a parchment deed, the other has a half open book. In the upper corner is his coat of arms, together with his motto, Qui s'estime Petyt deviendra grand. There is no definite entry relating to the gift of this portrait to the society, but there is little doubt that it came with other things from the estate of Sylvester Petyt. This gentleman by his will bearing date the 23rd of May, 1719, refers to the portraits of his brother and himself "which are now in the house in Belle Savage Yard" and desires that they may be set up in the church library at Skipton, Yorks, of which he was a substantial benefactor if not the founder, and to the poor of whose parish William had also bequeathed a legacy. Sylvester's portrait was accepted by the parish of Skipton and put up in the library, where it still hangs. William's portrait is not there, and seems to have found its natural resting place in the library of the Inner Temple to which William was so great a benefactor. A portrait of Sylvester Petyt, by Richard van Bleeck, is in the National Portrait Gallery.¹

In an inventory taken about the time of queen Anne's death, the "Grace Book" is mentioned. It was kept in the buttery by the chief butler, whose duty it was to lay it on the table before the treasurer at each meal. It is a small volume about nine inches by seven, is in MSS. throughout, and appears from the handwriting, in some parts, to be of the fifteenth century. The only graces which it now contains, of the "diverse gracie" mentioned in the contents, are three in number written in latin on a paper interleaved by Joshua Blew, who was chief butler and keeper of the library in 1713. The graces which, according to the table of contents, were originally in the book were probably transferred to a grace book of a later date when this was withdrawn from use. A great portion of the contents, in addition to the latin graces, has also been removed. There remain in the book an interesting "table of contents," which will be found in the Appendix, and a kalendar, with tables for finding the Sunday letter and the moveable feasts, beginning in 1436 (14

At the foot of the kalendar for each month are rhyming latin verses giving seasonable advice as to food and medical treatment, and expressing moral sentiments. The earliest reference to this book is on the first page of our first book of accounts. It is dated 1605-6, and is "for mending the Grace Book, bosses and clasps, new glueing it and putting in new parchments, 4*s*. 6*d*." It was mended again in 1618, in 1623, in 1656, and in 1671. The present binding is of a commonplace and modern character, the bosses and clasps have disappeared, and the edges have been cut. On one of the blank pages Joshua Blew has made the following entry :

Provyded that on Festival dayes whenne it shall happen the mayster of the Temple to be pre[sent] that then the Grace to be referred to his seying

And if the Grace boke be not sett on the borde that then the botelers to forfeit every oon of them a Peny to be paid incontinent to hym being present that shulde say Grace Whereof jd. shall be yeven to a poor man to Pray for the soule of the seyde John Nethersole

According to the ordinaunce thys present boke is made for a remembrance the xxi yere of King Henry the vijth and the yere of our Lorde 1505 as above.

I have not been able to trace any direct personal connection between John Nethersole and the Inner Temple. He belonged to a family settled near Barham in Kent. In the list of counsel practising in the reign of Henry VII. are the three Kentish names of John Fineux, of Gray's Inn,¹ John Nethersole, of Lincoln's Inn, and John Roper, of the Inner Temple.² Among the principal benefactors of the city of Canterbury, through whose munificence S. Michael's Gate was rebuilt in 1475, is John Nethersole, whose name was inscribed on the stone.³ In 1498 he was appointed, along with Sir John Fineux, a commissioner of oyer and terminer for Maidstone and Canterbury.⁴ Towards Lincoln's Inn, of which he was admitted a member in 1481, he was very charitably disposed, and a gift of 40 marks to that society towards building a library, in consideration of masses to be said by their chaplain for the repose of his soul, is duly recorded in their books.¹ His will, signed on the 12th September, 1504, was proved on the 11th February, 1504-5, by John Roper, one of his executors and residuary legatees.² By it he gives many legacies to churches and ecclesiastical foundations, chiefly in and about Canterbury, but nothing to either Lincoln's Inn or the Inner Temple. It is therefore reasonable to assume that the gifts to the two societies were made before September, 1504. He appoints as his executors and residuary legatees John Fyneux, chief justice of the lord king, to hold pleas "coram ipse rege," John Roper, William Nethersole his brother, Roger Lychefeld, and John Man, and, as overseers, the Abbot of S. Augustin's and the Prior of Christchurch, Canterbury. John Roper, who came from Linstede, in Kent, was of a family of lawyers, members of the Inner Temple. He married a daughter of Sir John Fineux, the lord chief justice,³ of Swingfield, in Kent, and was for some time attorney-general to Henry VIII.⁴ He died in 1524. His eldest son, William, married the eldest daughter of Sir Thomas More, and was the author of his biography.⁵ A John Roper became, by assignment, owner of one moiety of the master's house in or about 1542, a property which the same or another John Roper sold in 1586. There were other Ropers, also members of the society. It is possible, therefore, that the benefaction above indicated may have accrued to this inn through the testator's neighbour and colleague at the bar, John Roper.

The conclusion of this volume, which ends, for a time, the publication of our records, brings down the history of our inn to the accession of George I. Commencing in the reign of Henry VII., when the dynastic contentions of the wars of the roses were for ever set at rest, and concluding with the reign of Anne, when the then kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland were consolidated and formed into one, our records cover a period of over two hundred years. We have, in that cycle, the story of the Tudors and of the Stuarts, of the struggles of the great rebellion, of the attempted reforms and the failures of the puritan ascendancy, of the wealth of our society in its earlier history, and of its poverty in later days. The picturesquely mediæval appearance of our inn, with its hanging signs, its bastelle, its refectory and lodgings for the priests, its chapels for the patron saints, had disappeared before the restoration. Fires, of unusual ferocity, had laid waste the antient buildings of our society which afterwards assumed the monotonous but utilitarian aspect of to-day. All the courts of our inn, King's Bench Walk, our eastern boundary, and the cloisters had been destroyed and rebuilt. The great garden had been re-laid, re-turfed, and planted in the fashion of Haarlem and Amsterdam, and other little formal gardens, no longer to be found, had sprung up within our walls. There remained only, of our old foundation, the church and the antient hall of the templars, the ruined chapel of S. Ann hidden by the adjacent buildings, and some groined arches which indicated the old time features of our home. The highway to the inn was still the river, the great thoroughfare of the metropolis, and the antient privileges and exemptions of the society were still jealously guarded. Pure water and public lighting had cleansed the inn and added to its health and its security, and the plague, which, for over one hundred and fifty years, was an annual though unwelcome guest, had, by the end of the seventeenth century, altogether disappeared. The governors, who in former days reigned over us, had long since ceased to form part of our system. The crown and the council had ceased to interfere with the inns of court, and the benchers, of their own motion had, by a series of orders, established the rules which even to-day guide our deliberations. Contemporaneously with the feeling of independence which followed the revolution of 1688, the costly compliments and the sumptuous entertainments to royal favourites and powerful ministers, which formed a part of our antient programme, had come to an end. In another respect also time had worked a change. Our inns of chancery had, by the eighteenth century, ceased to be exclusively seminaries of learning, and had become little more than lodgings for young students or for elderly aspirants to the honourable and lucrative dignity of a principal or a treasurer. Through the whole of these two hundred years, we find a steadfast adherence to the time-honoured system by which the active workers of the profession of the law are divided into two branches distinct and well-defined. We see our students drawn from the same class of the community. We notice an ever-increasing affinity with the two universities, and the liberal arts still cultivated by our members. In the matter of legal education alone, we recognize, during this period, little or no advance. No perceptible difference existed between the training of the chief justices of Henry VI. and queen Anne. The curriculum of study described by Sir John Fortescue, in 1470, might equally well have served for an exposition by Sir John Holt, in 1710.

The church, round which our professional homes were clustered, had witnessed many changes. The old established religion with the prior and his priests, carrying the badge of knighthood and serving the order of S. John in the New Temple, had given place to the servants of the reformation. The revival of the mass, with its reactionary violence under Mary, had been succeeded by the restoration of the protestant faith under Elizabeth. The high church doctrines of Laud and his admirers had been followed by the outburst of puritanism. The attempted resuscitation of the old religion by James II. had induced many years of clerical and literary conflict in the pulpit and in the press, and our church had become, at times, the battlefield of contending ecclesiastics. But the consecrated temple itself, after its varied experience of altars, of tables, of vestments, of pulpits, of ornaments, and of whitewash, presented in the time of Anne a building not without attraction. Its former embellishments had gone, but it was still the alma mater of the two societies, and it was endowed with all the classical and architectural decoration which the greatest architect of the day could, without impropriety, add to the beauty of its original design.

The nineteenth century has swept away the handiwork of Wren, of Gibbons, and of other masters, and has reproduced, as far as may be, the mediæval tone of the antient church. Modern initiative has added to the antient system a broad and liberal scheme of legal instruction, and the good fellowship of the templars brings together, day by day, hundreds of barristers and students in our common hall. What the future may have in store for this purely English institution, described in our liturgy as "the two learned and honorable societies of this House," we may not know. It suffices that in the main principles of our society, in its collegiate character, in the freedom and the equality of our members, in the study and maintenance of the law, and in the recognition of our part in the administration of justice, we have trodden in the footsteps of our fathers, have bettered their instruction and improved their ways. The homes of our great lawyers may, like the hours noted on the sundial, pass away and be no longer thought of, but their memories will be venerated by English people, so long as they are proud of their country's history and of the spirit of their country's laws.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENT held on 24 November, 13 Charles II., A.D. 1661, before JOHN HEATH, attorney of the Duchy, EDWARD JOHNSON, ARTHUR TREAVOR, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

“Whereas grand readings in the Inns of Court were originally instituted for the improving of students and professors of the law, in the knowledge and learning of the statutes and laws of this kingdom, and never intended that the readers should, after all their pains and study in the performance of that exercise, be put unto such great and excessive cost and charges in unnecessary feasting and entertainments, as is not only very prejudicial to the readers in their estates and fortunes, but contrary to the very institution of readings, and have been a principal occasion of the long discontinuance of that exercise, the great and excessive cost and charges having much discouraged the undertaking and reviving of the same. For a full remedy whereof, and to the end that readings may for the future be reduced to their primitive institution, and that no person may be discouraged from the performance of that exercise by the unnecessary and expensive cost and charges thereof, be it therefore enacted by the authority of this Parliament, that for the time to come, no reader of this society shall come into the hall, any night during the time of his reading, in order to keep any supper, except it be for the first day when the reader is to take his place in the hall, neither shall any reader of this society invite or entertain in the hall any strangers upon any reading days, to the end that he may for the benefit of the students and other fellows of this society the better intend the performance of that exercise, without improvident excess.

“Whereas the liberty formerly granted to the gentlemen of this society in time of Christmas, intended only for a civil and moderate recreation, hath for many years past degenerated into licentiousness and disorder, to the great offence of Almighty God, the scandal and dishonour of this society, the corrupting and debauching of divers young gentlemen, members of the same, and unless timely prevented, may endanger the total subversion of the good government thereof, and although great care hath been taken and divers good acts from time to time made for the regulating of Christmas commons and redress of such shameful disorders, yet they have always proved fruitless and unsuccessful, and have not produced that good effect expected from them, for the preventing therefore of so great mischief, inconveniences, and further growing evil of this nature in time to come, It is upon full debate and consideration thereof had, ordained, and enacted that for the time of Christmas now next ensuing, no commons shall be kept within this House, but the commons of this House shall dissolve and break up on the Saturday after dinner preceding St. Thomas' day next, and not begin again until the Saturday night next ensuing the feast of Epiphany, and in the mean time the keys and possession of the hall, buttery, kitchen, and other rooms and places of like public office for this House, shall be left, remain, and abide in the custody and disposition of the treasurer of this society, to the end this present act may more effectually be observed and executed in all respects.

“Whereas in order to preserve the government of this House against all disorders and tumults, the power of inflicting the punishments of suspension from commons, putting out of commons, forfeiture of chambers, ameracements, and expulsion have been by the ancient orders of this House imposed upon the several fellows of this society according to the respective faults and crimes committed against the orders of this House ; and whereas of late times divers fellows of this society have upon occasion of imposing any the said punishments, endeavoured to raise a mutiny by giving countenance to the person or persons so deservedly punished, and in order thereunto, have not only put themselves out of commons but persuaded other fellows of this society to do the same, thereby giving countenance and abetting the persons so offending. For remedy whereof, be it enacted by this present parliament and by the authority of the same, that in case any member of this society shall, for any offence by him committed against the orders of this society, be either suspended, put out of commons, expelled, or otherwise punished, that then, if any fellow or member of this society shall in countenance of such offender, so put out of commons, either put himself out of commons or persuade any others to put themselves out of commons, or otherwise abet the said person so offending or punished, as aforesaid, that then all and every person, so offending, shall forfeit his and their chamber and be absolutely disabled from being called to the bar or bench and to be subject to such other punishment as the bench for the time being shall think fit to impose."

Special admissions of Henry and Thomas Pagett; of Robert Johnson, at the request of his uncle, Edward Johnson of the bench; and of Samuel Hopkins, son of Sir Richard Hopkins of the bench, at the request of his father.

The petitions of Henry Chilton, steward, and of James Ellis are referred to the table.

It is ordered that Dr. Ball, master of the Temple, shall be allowed from this society 25*li.* per quarter in full satisfaction for all dues and demands whatsoever from this society. And for the better raising of such monies, as already are or hereafter shall be payable from this House to Dr. Ball for his preaching in the Temple church, it is ordered that every fellow, who has a chamber, shall pay every term as follows: every bencher, 2*s.* 6*d.*; every utter barrister, 2*s.*; every other fellow, 1*s.* 8*d.*; and every fellow being in commons without a chamber, every utter barrister, 1*s.* 6*d.*, and every other fellow under the bar, 12*d.*

"It is likewise ordered that Dr. Griffith, lecturer of the Temple, shall be allowed from this society 12*li.* 10*s.* per quarter," and for the raising of which, every bencher shall pay 2*s.* per term; every utter barrister who has a chamber or shall be in commons, 1*s.* 6*d.*; and every other fellow who has a chamber or shall be in commons, 1*s.*

Officers for the grand Christmas :—Marshals : Francis, Lord Newport, Sir Thomas Littleton, and Sir Thomas Trevor. Stewards : Francis Coventry, Sir William Walter, and Sir Thomas Barnardiston. Butlers : Sir George Booth and Sir Bainham Throckmorton.

“Whereas by the ancient order of this society, every member thereof being once called to the degree of serjeant at law, hath usually quitted the possession of such chamber or lodging as he held therein before such his call, presently or at least within a term or two after, but now upon the last call of serjeants, whereby divers are removed hence who had never performed the office and exercise of readers, there hath been a necessity of calling many to the bench table to supply the exercise and government of the House, who suffer great inconvenience and discouragement for want of bench chambers, some whereof are still full of those serjeants, called above three years since, by which the exercise and government of the House hath much failed, and so is like to do for the future. It is therefore ordered and enacted, etc., that the head butler of this House do forthwith give notice to all serjeants at law, formerly of this Society, who do still keep the possession of any chambers or lodgings therein, which they formerly held as bench chambers, that they quit possession of the same before the end of this present term. And that if they shall neglect so to do by the space of fourteen days after the end of this term, that then the head butler of this House shall take possession of the same for the use of this society, or such masters of the bench who are by act of parliament of this House admitted thereto respectively, by setting new locks upon the doors of the same.”

Tyrrell, speaker of the Parliament for this Christmas.

Orders that Wicherly be controller for the present Christmas ; that Pargiter, Parker, and Tiner be stewards for the first week in Christmas ; and that Steward, Traps, and Hoskins be the committee of music for this Christmas.

Every person who shall come into commons this Christmas shall subscribe and pay 20s. to the stewards ; and that no person, now in town, shall be admitted into commons this Christmas but those who shall pay in the said 20s. to the stewards betwixt this and Wednesday at noon.

Mr. Lane to bring the order of the last Christmas Parliament into the next parliament.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 22 December.

Order that the stewards give in bond to the speaker to-day according to custom.

Whereas it appears upon the report of Sawyer and Cock that Hare was re-admitted after his expulsion, that therefore the former order for his suspension be taken off the file.

Order that Pollexfen give an account forthwith of all such moneys as he hath at any time received by the order of the committee of thirteen, appointed by the last Christmas Parliament. And further that the account which Pollexfen has now brought into this parliament of the moneys received by him, according to the order of the said committee, shall be a sufficient account and allowed. And the said Pollexfen to bring in the 31*li.* 12*s.* 4*d.* with which he now stands charged, into parliament this morning.

The accounts which Lister has brought in of the moneys received by him, by order of the said committee, be a sufficient account and allowed, and that he have the thanks of this House for his care and fidelity.

Ledgingham to have 60*li.* in satisfaction for his chamber, seized by the bench in pursuance of an order made 15 November, 1662, by the committee of thirteen ; and the 48*li.* 5*s.* 10*d.* already paid to him by order of the committee shall be part of the said sum ; and upon payment of the balance by the speaker, Ledgingham shall assign all his interest in the said chamber. Ledgingham to be particularly invited to keep his Christmas with this society, and the committee of music to wait upon him for that purpose.

The speaker to pay the residue of the 31*li.* 12*s.* 4*d.*, remaining in his hands after Ledgingham is satisfied, to the stewards for the use of the House.

No person who has not paid his 20*s.* and is owing for repasts shall take any more until he pay what is behind or his 20*s.*

Every person shall pay for his repasts before he rise from the table.

The gentlemen to pay 2*s.* for each repast, and for every stranger he brings in, 1*s.*

Auditors to be appointed to take an account of the 50*li.* paid to Pargiter and Hopkins by order of the committee of thirteen, for the use of the House, and John Harris, Boone, and Lane be the auditors for that purpose.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 27 December.

Order that the marshal upon the penalty of a noble, to be deducted from his wages for every default, to take care that there be but one table for hazard and that in the upper library, and that the table for hazard pay every box 1*s.*

The stewards, out of the money they are to receive from the speaker, are to pay all debts contracted during the last Christmas, not exceeding altogether the sums of 5*li.*

The steward to take care hereafter that dinner be served up at twelve o'clock, and supper before seven, and the present stewards to be continued for the following week, and that they have the thanks of the House for their care and pains.

Boone, John Harris, and Law to be the auditors, to audit this week's accounts, and to bring in their report next parliament.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 30 December.

Order that the 9*li.* in Hopkins' hands of the moneys delivered him by order of the committee of thirteen, be paid to the speaker.

That the benchers (including the six benchers of last call) be invited to dine with Mr. Controller this Christmas. That Sunday be the day for the benchers to dine with Mr. Controller, and that the committee of music be desired to invite the benchers accordingly.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 2 January, 1662-3.

Order that the serjeants of this society be likewise invited to dine with Mr. Controller on Sunday next ; and that the committee of music be desired to invite the serjeants accordingly.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 3 January.

Order that the present stewards be continued for the residue of this Christmas ; and that Pescod, John Harris, and Boone be auditors for the last week's expenses, and bring in their report to the next parliament.

That a committee be appointed to wait on Yong, late lord of the Inner Temple, and desire him in the name of this House to attend this society betwixt this and Twelfth Day ; and that Cook, Littleton, Gilthrop, and Mundeford be a committee to wait upon his late honour accordingly.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 4 January.

Ordered that whereas Pargiter, Parker, and Tirer "have now resigned their stewardships, that their resignation is excepted, and that they be longer stewards ;" and that they be again stewards for the rest of this Christmas.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 5 January.

Order that whereas it appears that Hare has affronted Powell, the said Hare be suspended commons till he acknowledges the said affront.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 6 January.

Ordered that Cooke be speaker pro tempore during the speaker's absence.

That whosoever shall now be chosen lord of the Inner Temple, shall not refuse the office; and that Martin be lord of the Inner Temple this Christmas.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 9 January.

Order that the former auditors be continued.

That a committee be appointed to collect all the rents due to the lord of the Inner Temple from chambers or offices in the House, and to pay them to his lordship's treasurer; and that Gilthrop, Mudeford, and Coddington be such committee.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 10 January.

Order that a committee be appointed to wait on the masters of the bench, and desire them, in the name of the gentlemen this Christmas, that Ledgingham be restored to the society; and that Buggin, Powell, Hampson, Richardson, Wicherley, and Terrell be that committee.

That Christmas commons end this night.

That eight persons be appointed commissioners to audit the accounts.

That Pargeter, Parker, Tirer, Richard Harris, Cook, John Harris, and Gilthrop, or any five of them, be such commissioners, and that Coddington be added to them.

That the former orders be executed before the first day of next term.

That the watchmen have their coats given to them.

Special admission of William Baldwin, son of Baldwin of the bench, at the request of his father; and of William Howard, son of Sir William Howard, at the request of his father.

“Whereas by the ancient orders of this House such gentlemen of this society as intended to be called to the bar, were to perform at the Inns of Chancery twelve grand moots over and besides petty moots and other exercises. And whereas that learned exercise, by reason of the long discontinuance of readings, hath been forborne, and since the reviving of readings not so diligently performed as formerly, by reason that the vacation utter barristers, who are ameriabile by the ancient orders of this House upon any failure of the said grand moots, have conceived that they were not equally obliged with other students under the bar to perform the same. It is therefore ordered that the said vacation utter barristers shall as formerly be diligent in performing the said grand moots under such penalties as were formerly inflicted upon them. And it is also further ordered that this House will expect that students under the bar of this society, that shall hereafter be called unto the bar, shall perform eight grand moots and such other exercise as they ought to perform, before they be called to the bar. And the third butler to take notice of all such as shall perform the said exercise, and of the failers, if any shall be, and at the beginning of the term to certify the bench then in commons thereof accordingly.”

The petition of Magdalen Curtis, widow of William Curtis, formerly for above thirty years steward of the society, to the treasurer and masters of the bench, setting out that her great sufferings in the late times which with many losses attending her impoverished condition, enforces her to ask for relief.

Order that the said petitioner shall have 10*li.* towards her relief.

PARLIAMENT held on 1 May, 16 Charles II., A.D. 1664, before RICHARD GODDARD, EDWARD JOHNSON, FRANCIS PHILLIPS, and others. HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Thomas Foster chosen reader for the summer vacation, and Sir Richard Hopkins, Milton, and Treavor, his attendants.

PARLIAMENT held on 22 May, 16 Charles II., A.D. 1664, before EDWARD JOHNSON, ARTHUR TREAVOR, EDWARD THURLAND, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

“Whereas a building is now erecting on the north side of the garden adjoining to the Temple Church, in the soil whereof the Middle Temple have an equal interest with this society, it is therefore declared at this present parliament that Dr. Ball, the present master of the Temple, shall have the leave of this society to hold and enjoy the same during his being master, and that after the death or removal of Dr. Ball the same shall for ever continue in the joint and equal disposition of both the societies.”

Special admission of John French, grandchild to the late Lord Chief Justice Foster, at the request of his father, Mr. French, of this House.

The petition of Sir Robert Henley, knight, prothonotary of the Court of King's Bench, that he and his father have held the buildings or rooms wherein the King's Bench Office is now kept, under the society, for above thirty years, at the rent of 5*li.*, and in consideration of the sum of 400*li.* contributed by George, Duke of Buckingham, the petitioner's predecessor, towards erecting the same. Of late the rent has been raised to 20*li.*; the petitioner therefore prays that the society will permit him to enjoy the said rooms for his life at the said rent of 20*li. per annum.* Whereupon an order was granted in accordance with the above petition.

The petition of Eleanor Saunders, widow of John Saunders, late under cook, that her husband, having been for many months sick of a lingering consumptive distemper, was compelled through poverty to contract some debts, the petitioner prays that some relief may be granted to her. Order that the petitioner be granted 5*l*.

MISCELLANEA.

1664, June 18. Orders made by the Lord High Chancellor of England and all the Judges of both benches and barons of the Exchequer, by command of the King, signified by the Lord Chancellor for the government of the Inns of Court and Chancery.

“First, That the Inns of Chancery shall hold their government subordinate to the benchers of every the Inns of Court unto which they belong, and that the benchers of every Inn of Court make orders for governing them, as to keeping commons and attending and performing exercise, according to former usage. And in case any attorney, clerk, or any officer of any court of Justice, being of any of the Inns of Chancery, shall withstand the direction given by the benchers of Court, upon complaint thereof to the Judges of the Court in which he shall serve, he shall be severely punished, either by ‘forejudging’ from the Court, or otherwise as the case shall deserve.

“Secondly, That the benchers of every Inn of Court cause the Inns of Chancery to be surveyed that there may be a competent number of chambers for students, and that once a year an exact survey be taken that the chambers allotted for that purpose be accordingly employed.”

Thirdly, as to the lodging and harbouring of dangerous persons. This is in the same words as the first of the like rules made in 1614 (see Inner Temple Records, vol. ii., p. 83).

Fourthly, as to good government in matters of religion. In the same terms as the second of the rules above referred to.

Fifthly, as to the society being ordained chiefly for the profession of the law. In the same terms as the third of the above mentioned rules.

“Sixthly, In that there ought always to be observed a difference between utter barristers, readers in Court, apprentices at law, which are the principal persons next to the sergeants at law and judges in administration of justice, and attorneys and solicitors, which are but ministerial persons of an inferior nature, and therefore it is ordered that from henceforth no common attorney or solicitor shall hereafter be admitted of any of the four Houses of Court.”

Seventhly, as to the maintaining of readings. In the same terms as the sixth of the rules before referred to.

“ Eighthly, That none be admitted to the bar but only such as be at least of seven years’ continuance and have kept his exercise within the House and abroad in Inns of Chancery, and have been frequently in commons according to the orders of the House. And none be called to the bar by readers but by the bench at parliaments, councils, and pensions, and that, when they shall find a number of fit and learned students and of honest conversation and well deserving the same.”

“ Ninthly, That the benchers hereafter be chosen for their learning, for their only keeping the exercises of their House, for their honest behaviour and good dispositions and such as for their experience and practice be of best note and ability to serve the kingdom. And if any refuse to read then they are to undergo such fine and censure as the benchers or readers shall think fit to lay on them, which, if they shall refuse to pay or perform, then upon complaint to the judges, such course shall be taken by them as shall enforce them to the performance thereof.”

Tenthly, as to decency in apparel. In the same terms as the ninth of the rules before referred to.

Eleventhly, as to reverence and respect. In the same terms as the last of the above rules.

“ Twelfthly, It is ordered that readings in the Inns of Court begin at the usual time and continue until Friday in the second week next after their commencement inclusive, as hath been heretofore used. And for the prevention of disorders, that the readers take care that no person be permitted to drink in their cellars, and that there be no expense of wine in the House but publicly in hall at meals.”

“Fourteenthly, For the better supporting and carrying on of readings, it is ordered that such benchers, barristers, and other gentlemen of the several societies attend at the readings for arguing the reader’s cases and performing other exercises and services, both within the societies and at the Inns of Chancery, as hath been used by the ancient orders of the respective Inns of Court. And that the benchers consider of and impose fitting penalties to enjoin the due observance thereof.”

“Fifteenthly, It is ordered that readers at Inns of Chancery be chosen and continue, and readings and all other exercises be duly performed there, according to the former usages of the respective Inns of Court and Chancery.

“Sixteenthly, For prevention of unnecessary expense lately crept into the Inns of Court and of disorders thereby occasioned, it is ordered that no gentleman of any Inns of Court, being either called to the bar or at or under the bar, who shall bring in any bar or other moot, shall give any entertainment with wine or otherwise to the gentlemen of the society or others, either within or out of the House, upon penalty that the gentleman that breaks this order shall pay 10*li.* to the society, and that such moot shall not be taken to be an exercise, but here to remain in the same (and no better) condition than as if the moot had not been performed at all.

“Seventeenthly, For that it is found by experience that by the neglect of commons in the vacations the gentlemen of the Inns of Court are often drawn to frequent ordinaries, gaming-houses, and other places of disorder, whereby the neglect of their studies, if not the corruption of their manners, is occasioned, it is ordered that the benchers of every Inn of Court take care that commons be constantly kept as well all the vacations as in the term time, except as is hereinafter mentioned, and that the barristers and other gentlemen of the societies do keep or be cast into commons, according to the ancient orders of the respective societies. And for the prevention of dishonour to the societies by the great disorders and mischief which happen by gaming and other licentious courses lately used in the time of Christmas, no commons shall be kept in any Inns of Court in the time of Christmas or in one week before or after. And if this order shall not be observed or if any shall presume to break open the hall, kitchen, or cellar doors in any Inns of Court or attempt the same, for the keeping of Christmas commons, that complaint be made thereof to the Lord Chief Justices or any other the Judges which shall be then in town who will take a speedy and . . . course for the suppressing and punishment thereof."

And lastly, for that the keeping up of constant exercises is the chiefest means of inciting gentlemen to diligence in their studies, and of attaining a sufficient ability in the profession of the law, it is ordered that the benchers of the several Inns of Court take especial care that exercises be regularly performed as well in the vacation as in the terms, according to the orders of the respective Houses, and for the better support thereof in the vacations, that barristers and gentlemen under the bar be strictly enjoined by the benchers of every Inn of Court, to keep their vacations according to the ancient customs of the respective Houses.

FINCH, treasurer.

Allowance to officers and watchmen. The allowance to the gentlemen for Christmas commons is referred to the bench table.

Stewards for the reader's dinner :—Lancelot Johnson, the elder, John Sparrow, and Edward Searle.

Petition of Dr. Richard Ball, reciting that "an habitation within your walls for your preacher is both of a civil and sacred concernment, which made me much desire it, though I sat rent free where I lived. The love of your society towards this work I do and shall always thankfully acknowledge, which gave me the last spring one hundred pounds. Besides that hundred pounds I have laid out upon that building one hundred and fifty pounds and upwards. My humble request to your honourable society is that you will be pleased to remove this great burden from my shoulders or at least to lighten it." Order for the said petition to be referred to Mr. Attorney of the Duchy and Sir Richard Hopkins, to inquire into the nature of the doctor's disbursements and report to the bench table.

Petition of Richard Rudyard, a member of the society of the Middle Temple. "That the petitioner's chamber being situate on the east side of the churchyard in part looking towards Parson's Court and the chamber over the same belonging to the Inner Temple, and the side of the chamber adjoining to Parson's Court being an old stone wall, and windows very ruinous and ready to fall down, to the great danger of the petitioner and his neighbours and all passing through Parson's Court." The petitioner at the encouragement of Sir Heneage Finch repaired the said chambers, and expended upon the Inner Temple chamber the sum of 20 marks, which he prays he may be re-imbursed. Order that Foster and Powell of the bench view the said repairs and report to the next parliament.

Petition of Thomas Moore, gentleman, member of the Inner Temple, that whereas by reason of his great loss sustained through one Fabian Hicks, late a member of this Society, to whom at several times he lent "by specialtie" and otherwise 27*0*l*i.*, for the last 7*0*l*i.* whereof he had a bargain and sale of a chamber, to which he was never admitted and so knoweth himself to be lost in law. And also by reason of several great losses sustained in the late rebellious times, for his loyalty, together with his great charge, having a wife and eight children reduced from a plentiful estate to extreme poverty, he prays he may be assigned a chamber in lieu of the chamber above referred to, or such relief as may seem meet. Order that 10*0*l*i.* be given to the said petitioner.

PARLIAMENT held on 12 February, 17 Charles II., A.D. 1664-5, before
others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Order upon the report of the attorney of the Duchy and Sir Richard Hopkins that 100*0*l*i.* be given to Dr. Ball to be paid out of the treasury of this House towards his great disbursements about the building of his house in the garden at the east end of the church.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENT held on 25 November, 18 Charles II., A.D. 1666, before
SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and SIR THOMAS
FORSTER. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

George Turberville called to the bar.

SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and FRANCIS PHELIPS. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Sir John Heath, attorney-general of the Duchy of Lancaster, Sir Edward Thurland, one of the King's counsel-at-law, Edward Pecke, Samuel Baldwin, William Lister, and Richard Powell, masters of the bench, or three of them, to be a committee "to treat with any persons and settle all matters in reference to the rebuilding of the Society."

Order for Edward Pecke to rebuild the rooms or chambers upon the soil allotted for the corner chamber of Tanfield Court, where his chamber, which was burnt down, formerly stood.

Licence to Hopton, Shuter, and Charles Stewart, in consideration of rebuilding the chamber of the said Shuter in Figtree Court, formerly burnt, and paying the sum of 10*l*. to have an assignment in the said chamber.

PARLIAMENT held on 27 January, 18 Charles II., A.D. 1666-7, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and FRANCIS PHELIPS.
SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Allowance to officers and watchmen during the discontinuance of commons.

Stewards for reader's dinner:—John Carrell, George Cure, and John Coysh.

Tuberville chosen one of the attendants on the reader in the place of Yorke, now deceased.

"Whereas at this parliament Richard Rowe, mariner, who had 5*l*. formerly given him by this society for his pains taken in extinguishing the fire at the end of the Inner Temple Hall, did now petition for a further reward, whereupon it is ordered that the petitioner shall have given to him the sum of 5*l.* more as a full and final reward from this society."

An agreement dated 27 January, 1666-7, between the treasurer and masters of the bench of the Inner Temple and Francis Phelips, a bencher, touching the new building of those chambers and rooms called the King's Bench Building, lately consumed by fire. (1) It is agreed that Francis Phelips may rebuild the said buildings four storeys high, and may also build 30ft. in length from the south end of the King's Bench Buildings, towards the river Thames, to adjoin and be part of the said building. (2) That Francis Phelips may have the old material and may lay the useless rubbish on the low place between the walks before the King's Bench Buildings and the Thames, and have the use of a landing-place used by the gardeners, and also the use of the void places before that building, or between the Thames and that building, for laying his materials and working his frame for the building. (3) That no partner or sharer be imposed on the said Francis Phelips, and that the gentlemen who had chambers in those buildings before the late fire, be preferred for the new chambers. (4) That the master of the King's Bench Office to be admitted to a treaty as others that had chambers, and the master of the Crown Office in the King's Bench may be treated upon the same terms. (5) That the said treasurer and masters of the bench, as far as lawfully they may in parliament, shall grant to the said Francis Phelips, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the ground where the said building called the King's Bench Building stood, the cellar under the south part thereof, and 30ft. of ground from the said building towards the River Thames, of the same breadth as the King's Bench Building, for three lives, whereof two are to be named within two years, and the third by the will or other writing of the said Francis. (6) That the said Francis shall have power to grant the said chambers. (7) As to the payments to the treasurer for admittances to the said chambers. (8) That the persons admitted to such chambers must be members of the society. (9) That every room of the said building is granted to the said Francis, his executors, administrators or assigns for three lives. (10) That the said Francis be admitted to the said ground without fine. (11) That the persons to whom the said Francis shall grant the same chambers shall hold the same without let or disturbance. (Signature of Francis Phelips.)

Order that the masters of the bench, who build any other lodgings in the House, are to have the like liberties and the same terms as Francis Phelips.

PARLIAMENT held on 10 February, 19 Charles II., A.D. 1666-7, before
SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and SIR THOMAS
FOSTER. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

“Upon the proposal of Dr. Ball, master of the Temple, to build his house, lately burnt down, at his own charge, and to lay out in building it the sum of 400*li.*, it is agreed and so ordered that Dr. Ball laying out 400*li.* or more in building the said house, and to build with brick, shall have a lease thereof for one and thirty years to commence from the time of his death or leaving the mastership of the Temple, which shall first happen, and that the said Dr. Ball, his executors, or administrators, within three months from and after the time of his death or removal, which shall first happen, shall make a tender of the said building and let the same for the whole term to the treasurers for the time being of both Temples, at 40*li.* per annum, which said treasurers shall have two terms' time to consider whether they will give 40*li.* per annum to the said Dr. Ball, his executors or administrators, for the said house so to be built as aforesaid, for and during the term of the said lease, and then the said house be employed as both societies shall agree, but if the said treasurers shall within the time aforesaid refuse to give to the said Dr. Ball, his executors and administrators, 40*li.* per annum for the said house, for and during the said term, then the said Dr. Ball, his executors or administrators, shall let the said house to the master of the Temple for the time being at 40*li.* per annum. And if the master of the Temple shall refuse to give the said rent, then he shall let the same to any member or members of either of the societies of the Temples and to no other, at what rate he thinks fit."

PARLIAMENT held on 28 April, 19 Charles II., A.D. 1667, before SIR EDWARD THURLAND, SIR THOMAS FORSTER, and CHRISTOPHER GOODFELLOWE. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Milton chosen reader, and Turberville, Sheires, and Etherington his attendants.

Special admission of John Goodfellowe, at the request of Christopher Goodfellowe, his father; and of Richard Powell, at the request of his father, Powell of the bench.

Sir Edward Thurland, Robert Sheires, Christopher Goodfellowe, Richard Croke, and William Lister, five of the masters of the bench, or any three of them, to be a committee to see the building by Ram Alley carried on and the passages set out, and the rubbish and other obstructions in the way of the buildings removed at the charge of those who layed the rubbish there, and to provide that the work be finished by winter. It is also desired that they will view the ground by the Alienation Office and arrent it.

PARLIAMENT held on 19 May, 19 Charles II., A.D. 1667, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and SIR THOMAS FORSTER. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Order that if any gentleman, who has undertaken the new building by Ram Alley, shall not begin the said building before the first parliament in the next term, then some other gentleman whose chambers have been burnt down, shall be permitted to build in his room.

"Whereas the original institution of reading did only respect the instruction and advantage of the students in the progress of their studies, and whereas according to the said institution and the ancient course and usage of readings thereupon grounded in this and other inns of court, the readers were not exposed to such excessive charges and expenses in feasting and entertainments as in these later times, wherein by reason of the late excesses in that kind, divers of this society, sufficient for their learning, have been and yet are very much discouraged from undertaking the said laudable exercise of reading, and whereas also of late years several gentlemen of this society, not content with the allowances of wine made unto them by the readers at public meals in the hall, have used to press into the reader's cellar and many times to carry strangers with them thither, there to entertain themselves and their friends, not without some disorder oftentimes happening to the gravity and good government of this society. For the better regulation therefore of such charges and the prevention of the like discouragements, irregularities, and inconveniences for the future, be it enacted and it is hereby enacted by this present parliament, that no reader of this society shall or may from henceforth have more than six servants in liveries to attend upon him during his reading without the licence and approbation of the treasurer and benchers of this society, or the major part of them for the time being, first had and obtained (the King's, Queen's, and Prince's counsel, the recorder of London, and such who are allowed to practise within bar, only excepted), and that no reader, without licence as aforesaid, during his said reading shall or may come at night into the hall or be at any expense there for exceedings or otherwise at suppers, or make any feasts or entertainments to strangers upon reading days. And that the said readers may be at liberty to take their own time for breaking their statute at the laver, so as the same be done without prejudice to the said exercise. And lastly that the gentlemen of this society shall be content with the reader's allowance of wine in the public hall at meals, without pressing or entering at any time hereafter themselves or carrying any strangers into the cellar appointed for the reader's stores."

PARLIAMENT held on 9 June, 19 Charles II., A.D. 1667, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and SIR THOMAS FORSTER. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

1668-1669. Numerous depositions and other papers as to pulling down the sword of the Lord Mayor of London, and insulting him by gentlemen of the Inner Temple, on 3 March, 1668-9.

The depositions are to the effect that on the arrival of the Lord Mayor and several of the aldermen to dine with the reader of the Inner Temple, they were compelled to retire from the tumult in the inn to Auditor Phillips' chamber. While there Sir John Nicholas came with a message from the King, and the Lord Mayor sent for the reader and some of the benchers to hear the King's message, when one of the fellows, by name Hodges (son of Mr. Hodges, late an Alderman of London), declared they would maintain the privileges of the House, and addressed the Lord Mayor as Mr. Mayor, and used him "slightly."

1668-9, March 21. Order for the attendance before the King in Council, of the recorder of London, and two or more of the aldermen, and of Hodges, Morgan, Pettus, Jeffries, Litleton, Shan, Wyn, and Bates, gentlemen of the Inner Temple.

1668-9, March 23. Letter from Thomas Wroth to William Petyt stating that "on Wednesday the 3rd current Mr. Reader, having a messenger sent him from the Lord Mayor (who had previous intelligence of the gentlemen's intentions) to acquaint him, that unless he might come as Lord Mayor he should not expect him. Being studious how to demean himself in so ticklish a case, he was advised to send some of the bar civilly to inform his Lordship of the students' fixed purpose to make claim that this society was privilegiatus and extra jurisdictionem of the city. Mr. Reader approved of Mr. George Jeffries and myself. Accordingly we went to Guildhall, where, finding the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen sitting (a stately object for a curious eye), Mr. Jeffries brake the ice, and after a complimentary salute with the presentation of Mr. Reader's respects to his Lordship and the rest of his brethren, told him that Mr. Reader (understanding his Lordship did defer doing him and this House the honour as to dine with him upon the account of the dispute might arise about bearing up his sword) had sent us to advertise his Lordship that the gentlemen (being at present persuaded by former precedents his Lordship ought not to carry his sword erect within the boundaries of the society) were resolved to stand upon their privileges, but hoped his Lordship would not deny them that right, but grant them what justice his predecessors had done. Upon this we were desired to withdraw (a motion I must acknowledge I thought improper, to say no more, to be made to persons who came to them upon such a message, but being somewhat to seek in City formalities we accordingly retired). After some short discourse amongst the cabal we were re-ushered in towards an answer, which amounted to this effect, viz. : That his Lordship took it as an high affront we should come so to accost him. Thereupon Mr. Jeffries replied that if he had any ways so expressed himself as that the manner savoured of disrespect towards his Lordship it was beyond his intentions and he was misunderstood, wherefore he craved leave to explain himself. Upon that he spake some words whose direct sense I cannot on the sudden recover, but as I then apprehended they sounded in nature of an apology. I seconded them with this caveat, by request that his Lordship would not let our actings reflect upon our particular persons since we came not on the students' but Mr. Reader's account. Mr. Jeffries added that both Mr. Reader and the whole House had so great a regard for the Lord Mayor of London, and especially towards his Lordship's peculiar person, that we came in testimony of that respect to acquaint his Lordship with the gentlemen's design, that he might not be surprised, and that if his Lordship would please to waive the debate and so far to comply with the gentlemen's humours as to dispense with that point of state, his Lordship should find all imaginable civility of treatment as large as any his predecessors had. Leaving them again to their consultations, some minutes being passed, we received this answer by the city mouth :—That his Lordship would not compound with hot-headed young men, and that he would not come at all. Whereupon we desired some of his brethren's presence ; he told us it was an improper proposal, and they unanimously cried out one and all, perceiving his Lordship's backwardness. Mr. Jeffries told him that the society would take it as a great favour to enjoy his and his brethren's company and they were so sensible of the honour they should receive thereby as that possibly (which if I mistake not in a little time changed note into doubtless) Mr. Reader might so far prevail with the gentlemen as to persuade them not to desire or expect anything of reverting his Lordship's sword. This caused the last private debate which brought forth this vote, spoken by his Lordship himself : I bear the King's sword, London is my jurisdiction, and I shall bear it up throughout the City, I take the Temple to be part thereof where my predecessors have borne it up, and that of late memory since the King's restoration. Hereupon I desired favour to interrupt his Lordship and offer as a particular instance to the contrary that the sword was turned down when his Lordship's brother, Mr. Turner, was reader of the Middle House. Sir John Lawrence stood up and told his Lordship that at that time he had the honour from the King to be entrusted with the sword now committed to his Lordship, and assured him there was no such thing, but he bore it upright all the way, his Lordship (if I mistake not) confirmed the same by his own knowledge. I turned my speech to one of the aldermen near me, and in a lower voice told him that I might mistake the precise example, but the thing was lately done I was very confident." The Lord Mayor insinuated somewhat derogatory to the Reader's candour and hospitality, and being the King's representative when we spoke to him we spoke to the King, and therefore we ought to use sober expressions. The Lord Mayor's final resolution was, "My service to your Reader, etc., and tell him I will come and dine with him, I will bear up my sword and see who dares take it down." I gave his Lordship many thanks and our errand was done.

1668-9, March 24. Order for the attendance before the council of Hodges.

1668-9, March. Numerous informations and depositions touching this matter whereby it appears that the Lord Mayor and aldermen were forced on arrival to retire into Auditor Phillips' chamber by reason of the opposition of the students to the sword being held upright. The Lord Mayor determined to return home, and upon entering the cloister the students would not permit him to go peaceably, but cried, "Down with the sword!" so that he was compelled to return to Mr. Phillips' chamber, where he was followed by the students shouting and crying, "A Hall! a Hall!" There are also depositions as to an alleged assault upon the City Marshal's man.

1669, April 7. Order at the council, after reading affidavits against Hodges, Wyn, and Mundy, the three principal actors in the disorders, that the declaration of the King's pleasure touching the matter be suspended till the rights and privileges of the Temple had been tried before the courts.

Abstracts from Stow's chronicle continued by Edmund Howes, and from various deeds and charters as to the liberties and privileges of the Inner and Middle Temple.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, and SIR THOMAS
FOSTER. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Special admission of Thomas Milton, eldest son of Milton of the bench, at the request of his father.

Order that Arthur Sparkes of the Middle Temple, be admitted one of the utter barristers of the society, and that he be of the same standing as he was in the other House.

John Peachey, Matthew Holbech, Thomas Langley, Henry Sayer, Jacob Trollop, John Blencoe, Edward Ward, and Daniel Witcherly (who is to be sworn at his time) called to the bar.

PARLIAMENT held on 5 February, 22 Charles II., A.D. 1670-1, before
SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, SIR THOMAS FOSTER,
and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Stewards for the reader's dinner:—Thomas Henshaw, Thomas Frewen, and Anthony Farrington.

Richard Holloway, Francis Pemberton, and Sir William Poultney, called to the bench.

and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Special admission of John Herbert, of Swansea, in the county of Glamorgan, at the request of Lord Chief Justice Vaughan, his grandfather.

Order that "William Petyt, exigenter for London, for his services done in asserting and defending the rights and privileges of the Temple, be called to the bar, and to be an utter barrister of this House, and to be sworn at his time."

Powell, Hampson, and West, are desired to meet on Wednesday night next, to treat with the principal and ancients of Lyon's Inn, concerning the erecting of a new building in the said House.

Order that the opening of the passage into White Friars be respited.

Order that all persons concerned in the chambers in the new buildings, built since the late dreadful fire of London, shall nominate their lives and pay their fines, or their chambers to be forfeited.

PARLIAMENT held on 24 May, 23 Charles II., A.D. 1671, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, SIR THOMAS FOSTER, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

The admissions made at the last reading of Theophilus, Earl of Huntingdon, Robert, Earl of Ailesbury, Thomas, Viscount Fauconberg, and Charles West, son of Lord Delawarr, are confirmed.

The petition of the treasurer and fellows of Lyon's Inn, setting out that the said society (being a very ancient society) for many years last past has been and still is much straitened, not only in buildings and chambers to entertain the fellows, but also in ground whereon to build, for supply whereof the petitioners' predecessors, being owners of five tenements belonging to Lyon's Inn, were pleased by an act of their parliament made in 35 Elizabeth, to unite to their ancient House, two of the said five tenements, which were shortly after taken in and built upon for the enlargement of their House; and the three other tenements were afterwards purchased by the petitioners' predecessors, the conveyance thereof being taken to feoffees in trust for the benefit of the society. And the ancient chambers of the House (being very bad and inconvenient, either for students or practisers) many of the fellows are necessitated to take lodgings abroad, whereby they keep themselves out of commons, and the public exercises of the House are not attended as they ought to be.

For the remedy whereof the treasurer and ancients of the said society have resolved on a course for new buildings within the confines of the ancient House, which, as by a "platform" thereof showed to a committee of the bench, will extend to the street on both sides, and now only inclosed with dead walls, but not having a stock for building they are enforced to set out the ground for a term to some members of the society, that will undertake the building if they may have liberty to convert the ground rooms towards each street into shops, which after the end of such term will turn to the sole benefit of the society. And although the whole building intended is to be on the ancient ground of the House, whereon the petitioners humbly conceive they may build for chambers, yet in regard of the converting of the ground rooms towards the street into shops, they think it a duty not to proceed to any such contract for building without application for the concurrence of the benchers of the Inner Temple therein.

Upon consideration of their said petition, and reference to the plot or map tendered by them, whereby the place appears to be at the east end of the ground of the same House, and to be built on from north to south, it is ordered that they may make three such rooms into shops northward and as many southward for twenty-one years, so that there be no doors nor passage from such shops into the House of Lyon's Inn. And the said plot to be kept amongst the records of the Inner Temple.

Order that Charles Holloway, Hampson, and Richard Holloway be a committee to confer with the masters of the bench of the Middle Temple, concerning the building of one Smith upon the walls of the house of Dr. Ball, to the weakening and endangering of his dwelling and stopping up of his lights.

Letter from the Earl of Essex to Sir Heneage Finch :—"Sir, the term now drawing on and consequently the meeting of the parliament of the Inner Temple, I presume to remind you and the rest of the worthy gentlemen who are the benchers of that society, of my last request and your very kind promises, and desire that you will at your next meeting, direct the opening the gate into Whitefriars. And whereas you were apprehensive that myself, or such as shall claim under me, may pretend as of right to a gate there, I do hereby declare that I do neither pretend to it nor desire it as a right, but as a favour from the House, and shall ever be ready to acknowledge it as such."

Order upon the above letter that the passage between the new buildings called King's Bench Building, and the new buildings joining to the same, formerly called Stapleton's Buildings, be forthwith opened, and that such door or doors be fitted with locks, and be shut and opened at such times as this society shall think fit.

Whereas Richard Roberts, panierman of this society, has lately by consent of the bench built two shops in Tanfield Court, he requests that a term may be granted to him in the said shops. It is therefore ordered that he, his executors, and assigns may hold the same shops for thirty-one years.

PARLIAMENT held on 4 June, 23 Charles II., A.D. 1671, before SIR EDWARD THURLAND, EDWARD PECK, THOMAS FARRER, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Order that Powell, Hampson, West, Mowsier, and Charles Holloway, or three of them, be a committee to consider the proposals for a new building at the south of Sir John Sparrow's building towards the Thames.

Order for the abatement of the fine of Baynes for admittance to a chamber.

Order for the nominating of lives in the new buildings.

PARLIAMENT held on 25 June, 23 Charles II., A.D. 1671, before Sir JOHN HEATH, attorney of the Duchy, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, WILLIAM LISTER, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Special admission of Christopher Wandesford, at the request of Serjeant Baldwin.

“ This parliament having taken notice of the notorious disorders for divers nights lately past, committed in Fleet Street near the same society, by divers disorderly and unknown persons in actual breach of his Majesty's peace, by assaults insolently, with great violence made upon the watchmen there attending their duty according to the laws of the land and customs and orders of the city of London, and that in open contempt and defiance of the good and laudable government of the same city and with great rudeness and incivility to the very person of the right honourable the Lord Mayor thereof in the actual exercise of his lawful authority ; for the suppression of the same disorders, some of which misdoers having escaped the pursuit of the watch, have, by and upon the pretence of being fellows of the society, obtained entrance (as is reported) at the gates of this House at unseasonable times of the night, abusing the same House for a refuge from justice, to the dishonour of this society and reproach to the discipline thereof." It is therefore declared that this society will use all possible care and diligence for the discovering of the same offenders and for bringing them to condign punishment, and it is commanded to every officer and servant to make strict inquiry for the same offenders, and as soon as they shall discover their names to give information thereof to the attorney-general, treasurer of the society, that they may be proceeded against. And if any fellow shall assault any watchman of the city of London or disturb or resist them in doing their duty, such fellow shall be ipso facto expelled. That the gates of the House shall be every night fast locked and bolted before eleven o'clock and in no case opened again before four o'clock next morning. And if any fellow attempt to force open the gates of this House or assault, menace, or abuse any servant for doing his duty in keeping the gates fast, such fellow shall be ipso facto expelled.

Licence to Richard Fifeild, formerly chief butler of this society, to dispose of his chambers in the Inner Temple Lane.

Licence to the treasurer and fellows of Lyon's Inn to convert the ground rooms of their proposed new buildings lying northward and southward towards the respective streets, into shops, so that there be no door or passage immediately out of or through such shops into Lyon's Inn. Saving to this society and the trustees for the same the several rents heretofore due from the society of Lyon's Inn or their trustees to this society or the trustees of the same.

PARLIAMENT held on 9 July, 1671, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD THURLAND, THOMAS FOSTER, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Special admissions of Christopher Goodfellow, son of Serjeant Goodfellow, formerly a bencher; at the request of his father, and of Oxenbridge Harward, at the request of Richard Coke.

Stephen Primatt having admitted himself to Gray's Inn without the leave of this society and being called to the bar there, returned into commons in this House, and denied to pay his duties, for which being sent to the bench table, he refused to come unless he might sit at the bar table. It is therefore ordered that he be expelled from the society.

Order that Lucas' chamber be seized and Almery, who lodges there, have a fortnight to move his papers.

Giles Duncombe, William Peck, Thomas Littleton, Samuel Trottmann, Richard Andrews, Peter Shepheard, John Baynes, Robert Wynn, John Shann, Robert Browne, John Powell, and Robert Fagg called to the bar. Littleton, Trottmann, Browne, and Shann to be sworn as of this term, and the rest when they have received the sacrament.

PARLIAMENT held on 29 October, 23 Charles II., A.D. 1671, before SIR EDWARD THURLAND, SIR THOMAS FOSTER, THOMAS FARRAR, and others. SIR HENEAGE FINCH, treasurer.

Auditors:—West, Mowsyer, Buggin, and Cure, for the steward's accounts; and Powell, Crooke, Richard Edwards, and Thomas Edwards, for the treasurer's accounts.

BENCH TABLE held on 25 November, 1670.

Order that Farrer, Croke, Powell, Hampson, and Holloway consider of the setting up of all the readers' coats of arms in the library and to treat with a herald painter about it.

Farrer, West, Mowsier, and Holloway to consider of the differences among the workmen at the building near Ram Alley.

BENCH TABLE held on 10 February, 1670-1.

Whereas the treasurer and ancients of Lyon's Inn desire to erect a new building in Lyon's Inn upon waste ground there, the matter, as to viewing the ground and the title of the said treasurer and ancients, is referred to Powell, Hampson, and West.

Order for keys to be made and locks fixed to all the doors, except two, belonging to this House, because of the great resort of foreigners and strangers to the necessary houses of this House.

At a committee held on 10 February, Powell, West, and Holloway being present, it was ordered that Ayliffe should not dispose of his garret chamber till he had paid Cressett (sic), the carpenter.

Upon the showing of some coats of arms of the readers' which were blazoned by Waker, painter and herald, and adjudged by the committee to be reasonably done, it was ordered that he paint the same to be fixed in the library, at 3s. an escutcheon, and 5s. to be allowed for every new reader.

Whereas the House has been at a considerable charge in roasting and dressing the provisions and commons of the House with charcoal, it is ordered that the old range, wherein charcoal is burnt, shall stand, and a new one over against it on the other side of the kitchen shall be made with irons for the burning of sea coals, and the great pot to be fixed in brick "copper wise" for sea coal.

Order that the steward bring in his flesh by five or six o'clock at night or at six in the morning, and the fish by ten in the morning.

Order that Richard Parrington be second cook in the room of Ralph Bancroft, and the said Ralph to succeed Turnespitt in the room of the said Richard.

Order that a gauge be bought for measuring casks of beer.

BENCH TABLE held on 14 May, 1671.

Order that the chief butler affix to the screen an order for all gentlemen to pay for their commons in arrear.

Order that Stephen Cresser, the carpenter, view the remaining part of the gate belonging to the arch near the water side, and report.

BENCH TABLE held on 15 May, 1671.

Order for Charles and Richard Holloway to view the building of Smith adjoining the house of Dr. Ball, and to report what prejudice is done to his house thereby.

James Farr, an inhabitant of Fleet Street, lately petitioned that whereas his dwelling house was much in decay, there was a necessity to re-build it, and that a small part of his ground room, which looked into Hare Court, of about 4 ft. in breadth and 6 ft. in length, stands out beyond the rest of his building, yet ranges with the adjoining messuage, he cannot however make his work uniform unless that which stands out be carried up of an equal height with the rest, he therefore prays that he may be permitted to carry his house up of an equal height, two stories above his ground room. Which petition was referred to Robinson, an associate of the bench, Powell, and West, two of the masters of the bench, who reported that the south side of Farr's dwelling adjoined the north end of Hare Court towards the chamber of John Turbervill, and that out of the ground room of the back part of the said dwelling house, towards the west end thereof, there was a small jetty into Hare Court, one story in height, etc. Whereupon licence was granted to the said James Farr to carry up the said jetty of the length of 7 ft. 10 in. and the breadth of 3 ft. 5 in. two stories high above the ground room. To hold for 21 years, and the said James Farr to pay a fine of 40s. and the yearly rent of 6s. 8*d.*

Order that George Warner, the steward of this society, may hold certain shops and rooms set out in his petition (not recited) built since the late dreadful fire of London, for 21 years at the rent of 6s. 8*d.* And it is also ordered "that the said shop and rooms, now built, adjoining to the same, shall be subject to the House in case both Houses shall hereafter agree to pull down the buildings that are now about the church and next adjoining the said shop and rooms, in order to the repairing and beautifying the outside of the church."

others. SIR JOHN TREVOR, treasurer.

Richard Holloway chosen reader.

Order that Robinson, Milton, Etherington, Farrar, Powell, Hampson, C. Holloway, Richard Holloway, Shuter, Dolben, and Farrington, or three of them, do meet in the library on Tuesday next, to receive the proposal of the inhabitants of Mitre Court concerning a drain into the Inn.

Petition of John Playford, clerk of the Temple Church, to the treasurer and masters of the bench, informing them of several matters in the church which want speedy repair.

"First, the doors in the screen, which parts the church, are at this time so much decayed and broken as they are no security to the church, wherein now standeth the chest with your communion plate and also the several vestments and books belonging to the church.

"Second, the pulpit is so rotten at this time and decayed as it is in great danger of falling; also the velvet before the pulpit and the cushion thereto belonging, are both so much decayed and worn out, having been so often mended, as much longer they cannot be serviceable.

"Third, there is at this time great want of a good bell in the steeple, which want may be soon supplied if your masterships shall please to give order that those two bells now in the steeple, which are both cracked and useless, be cast into one; it will make an excellent bell that will be heard into all courts belonging to both societies.

"Fourth, the two surplices at this time belonging to the church are both worn out, one of which is allowed by the honourable society."

A like paper was delivered to the society of the Middle Temple.

MISCELLANEOUS.

1677, June 1. Letter from William Minors, chief butler to — Finch, as to compounding for duties.

1677, December 11. Serjeants' Inn in Chancery Lane. "The judges of both benches and barons of the Exchequer taking into consideration a difference depending in the society of Clifford's Inn concerning the election of a principal, whereupon the benchers of the Inner Temple and the judges of that Society had been attended and had proposed expedients, but there had been no acquiescence, did think fit to appoint a meeting of all the judges to prevent the ill consequences and scandal that may arise to the profession of the law thereby, and accordingly the Lord Chief Justice Raynsford, Lord Chief Justice North, Lord Chief Baron Mountague, Baron Littleton, Justice Windham, Justice Atkins, Justice Jones, Justice Scroggs, this day assembled, Justice Twisdon, Justice Wyld, Baron Thurland, and Baron Bertie being hindered by infirmity or other accident, Mr. Powall, treasurer of the Inner Temple, and Mr. Hampson, bencher of that House, attending without, and Mr. Sommers and

Mr. Graham, the two competitors for the office of principal, and divers other members of Clifford's Inn, of their several parties, likewise attending, were called in and examined whether they had pursued the due methods of making complaints of this nature, which the judges declared ought to be made in this manner, viz., first to the benchers of the Inns of Court, to which they belong, to whose government the government of the Inns of Chancery is and ought to be subordinate, and if any of the Inns of Chancery shall find themselves aggrieved by the determination of the said benchers, they may appeal to his Majesty's judges that were of that Inn of Court, who may examine, and, if they see cause, correct such determination. And if any shall think fit to appeal from the determination of the said judges, they may apply themselves to all the judges, who, upon any general meeting, may take order therein. And in this particular case it appearing that applications had been first made to the benchers of the Inner Temple, and after to the judges of that society, but some questions arising about the formalities of the said appeals, it was proposed as an expedient that setting aside all former decisions and proposals, the judges would appoint a day for the hearing of all parties concerning the right and manner of election, and determine the same, to which there appears a general concurrence. And Mr. Powell and Mr. Hampson did on the behalf of the Inner Temple assent, and Mr. Sommers and Mr. Graham likewise and the rest of the society of Clifford's Inn then present, whereupon the judges did appoint Monday next at nine of the clock in the morning in this place to hear all parties concerned in this matter, and thereupon to take such order as to them shall seem just. At which time and place, the said justices being again assembled, the treasurer and several of the benchers of the Inner Temple and the contesting parties of Clifford's Inn attending were called in, and after a full hearing of what would be alleged on either side, it clearly appeared to the said judges that by the ancient constitutions of the society of Clifford's Inn, upon any vacancy of the office of principal there ought to be three persons proposed by the rules to the commons of the House for their election; and that the commons had not liberty to choose any other person to be principal but one of the three so proposed, but the said justices declared that it is agreeable to reason and justice that every one of the persons, so to be proposed, be a person well qualified for the office. And if the rules propose persons unfit, it may be just cause of complaint, which being alleged to be the present case and the chief ground of the complaint to the benchers of the Inner Temple, whereupon the benchers had thought fit to change the nomination in order to a new election. The judges, to avoid personal reflections, which would increase the opposition of parties, declined the examination of that matter, and because victory on either side would occasion burnings and reproaches, they proposed divers expedients for a new election of a principal to continue for three years, wherein the present competitors should be wholly waived. But difficulties appearing therein, it was at last unanimously agreed by all parties that if the judges there present would be pleased to take the trouble to nominate any of the rules of that society to be principal, they would willingly submit that such person should be principal for three years.

Which being accepted by the judges, and the names of all the rules being presented to them, the said judges did unanimously concur in the nomination of Mr. Ingram to be the principal of their society for the term of three years from the death of Mr. Attwood.

After which it was represented to the judges that in the society the rules are arbitrarily chosen without regard to antiquity, and it was answered that the society being divided into parties by this difference, the party which had at this present the major vote among the rules would overpower the rest in the choice of new rules wholly out of their own party, so that the others which were the major part of the society, although the major part of the present rules might be oppressed, and that the power of the principal was swelled so much by the influence he had upon the rules, that he is now allowed eighteen chambers for his own use, when other members of the society want the chambers, and that there ought to be yearly accounts given up, but no account had been given these many years past, which inconveniences are the occasions that the commons of the society have so earnestly desired a principal of their good liking that matters may not be carried so for the future.

Whereupon the judges declared that the occasion of their meeting was concerning the election of a principal, which being now over, they thought it not proper to take any order on other matters, nevertheless they did intimate that upon the choice of a rule those which were most ancient in the society ought not without reason to be pretermitted, but upon that or any other abuse of government there might be complaint to the benchers of the Inner Temple, who are to regulate the same and until they have been applied unto, the judges will not meddle therein."

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENT held on 4 November, 29 Charles II., A.D. 1677, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR JOHN TREVOR, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

The choosing of the reader postponed till the last parliament of this term.

PARLIAMENT held on 18 November, 29 Charles II., A.D. 1677, before [blank]. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

PARLIAMENT held on 25 November, 29 Charles II., A.D. 1677, before [blank]. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Sir William Poultney, Wyatt, and Johnson, chosen attendants on the reader.

Whereas Thomas Robinson, chief prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas, an ancient associate of the bench table, has paid to the treasurer the sum of 200*li.*, as a free and voluntary present, and whereas Richard Brow[n]low, his predecessor, was formerly an associate of the bench table, and was afterwards called to be a bencher with a discharge from readings, and was afterwards elected treasurer, it is therefore ordered that the said Thomas Robinson shall be called to be one of the masters of the bench, with a full discharge to him of his readings, and to hold seniority and other privileges as if he actually performed the office and duty of a grand reader.

Order that care be taken for the preservation of Roger Crowle's interest in the King's Bench Buildings.

PARLIAMENT held on 29 November, 29 Charles II., A.D. 1677, before [blank]. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Order that William Minors, the head butler, shall have the like privileges "as the several other builders of the burnt buildings," and shall have 22 ft. in front and 20 ft. depth towards Whitefriars, whereon to build a cellar and three storeys over at the lower end of Hampson's buildings.

Order that the committee appointed concerning the re-building of the King's Bench Buildings, lately consumed by fire, shall draw up an act for that purpose.

Alston, at his request, is discharged from continuing master of the revels.

Sir Robert Sawyer, Robinson, Hampson, Sir William Poultney, Edward West, Pollexfen, and Courtney, of the bench, and Thomas Pettit, Thomas Jennor, Edward Ward, Robinson, the younger, William Simpson, Thomas Milton, William Barnesly, William Abell, Samuel Dodd, Philip Neeve, John Powell, Richard Powell, Henry Crispe, and Henry Gaudy, appointed a standing committee to regulate the expenses of the buttery and kitchen.

PARLIAMENT held on 27 January, 29 Charles II., A.D. 1677-8, before SIR JOHN TREVOR, SIR ROBERT SAWYER, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Sir George Jefferyes called to the bench.

Order that those having chambers in the King's Bench Buildings shall pay their fines. And that all gentlemen residing in and about the city of London shall pay their House duties on or before 2 February, and those in the country before the next parliament, upon pain of being excluded from all interest in the intended new buildings.

PARLIAMENT held on 10 February, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1677-8, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR JOHN TREVOR, SIR ROBERT SAWYER, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Stewards of the reader's dinner:—George Farwell, Francis Wightwick, and Edward Bullock.

Whereas many of the sufferers by the late fire in the King's Bench Buildings have desired leave to build their chambers, it is ordered that they or their assigns may do so, three pair of stairs high and no more, besides the ground chambers and cellars, upon the same foundation in the front to the walks as formerly, and 38 ft. in depth, with a brick wall, not to be lower than 6 ft., to be built next to the Whitefriars and a space to be left between the said wall and the buildings. And for the encouragement of the said builders, it is ordered that every owner or assignee shall have two lives and an assignment in his respective chambers, so to be built, and that Sir John Trevor, Sir Robert Sawyer, Robinson, Hampson, Sir William Poultney, Edwards, the present reader, Johnson, Wyatt, Heath, Courtney, and Kelinge, shall be a standing committee to settle all differences touching the said building, with various powers given to them as to bringing in other members to build in the place of any owner neglecting or refusing to join in the said building. And whereas Francis Philipps, an infant, was, by virtue of his father's last will, owner of a double chamber, one pair of stairs high, it is ordered that Sir Robert Sawyer may join in rebuilding the said chamber, provided that if the said Francis shall within one year after he shall attain the age of twenty-one, repay the said Sir Robert the money disbursed by him with interest, that he, being a fellow, shall be admitted to the chamber aforesaid. And every of the said builders shall, for every chamber, deposit 50*li.* with Mr. Blanchard, goldsmith, near Temple Bar, before 2 February next. And the said builders shall have liberty to make a gateway in the Temple wall by the Thames side, and to land and lay materials there, and frame their timber and make mortar, as former builders, making good the wall again.

Order, with the consent of Livesay, that in recompense for his interest and materials in the late King's Bench office, he shall have 120*li.*, and that the treasurer, Robinson, Milton, Farrar, Hampson, West, Holloway, Sir William Poultney, Edwards, the reader, Wyatt, Heath, and Selby, be a committee to treat with Livesay for the disposal of the ground, and to allot new ground whereon to rebuild the said office, which is to be one storey high, as the Exchequer office, and covered with lead.

PARLIAMENT held on 28 April, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1678, before SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR GEORGE JEFFERYES, THOMAS FARRAR, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

The choosing of the reader is respited.

Special admissions of Samuel Cust, second son of Sir Richard Cust, bart., at the request of Edwards; of Richard Holloway, second son of Richard Holloway, serjeant at law, at the request of his father; and of John Kelinge, eldest son of Kelinge, of the bench, at the request of his father.

PARLIAMENT held on 14 May, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1678, before THOMAS ROBINSON, ROBERT HAMPSON, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Additional privileges granted to William Minors in the buildings he is erecting at the lower end of Hampson's Buildings, reciting the previous orders and grants made to him.

Order for those who have an interest in the King's Bench Buildings to make their payments of 50*li.* and 40*li.* each before the first day of next term.

Whereas in 1668, William Roundethwaite, joiner, with the leave of the bench, erected at his own expense a shop or working room in the Inner Temple ground near the gardener's house, to work in for the service of the said society, which was so used till about 1677, when it was destroyed, to the loss and prejudice of the said William. And at his petition the masters of the bench gave him licence to build a room at his own charges for the standing and keeping of the water engine belonging to this society, and to build over it a shop or room to work in for the service of the society, it is therefore ordered that the said William and his assigns shall hold the same during the pleasure of the treasurer and benchers.

PARLIAMENT held on 9 June, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1678, before SIR THOMAS HANMER, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, THOMAS FARRAR, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Order for the payment of 50*li.* by Pyers and other gentlemen interested in the King's Bench Buildings.

PARLIAMENT held on 16 June, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1678, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR JOHN TREVOR, SIR THOMAS FOSTER, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Allowance of two lives and one assignment to Sir John Trevor in consideration of his rebuilding his chamber in the Inner Temple Lane.

Articles of agreement made with Livesay on 18 June, 1678, for rebuilding the King's Bench office. The said office to be 80 ft. in length, 30 ft. in breadth, and 11 ft. in height, between the floor and ceiling. The roof to be covered with lead, allowing nine pounds of lead to every foot. Articles as to the doors, windows, and fittings, as to the nomination of lives and the use of the building in case it should cease to be used for the said office, as to the payments to be made by the said William Livesay towards the said building, and stipulations touching his keeping the same in repair and paying the chimney money and all other public taxes, and not to burn any sea coals in the chimneys or other fuel or firing, "save only charcoals and billets."

Order that the treasurer proceed to cause the said office to be built accordingly on the ground where the foundations of the same were last digged, between the building lately erected by William Minors on the east part and the gardener's house on the west, and that he cause to be built four ground chambers under the said intended office with one chimney in each. Further stipulation against the use of sea coal.

PARLIAMENT held, by adjournment, 19 June, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1678, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR JOHN TREVOR, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, and others. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Appointment of the treasurer, Farrar, Hampson, Edwards, and Johnson to be a committee to view and set out the ground for Sir John Trevor's building.

Appointment of the same members (except the treasurer) to view and set out the ground for the treasurer's buildings.

Order for a committee to be appointed to settle all differences concerning the King's Bench new buildings.

Order that Methwyn's petition be referred to the table.

Order that commons and exercise be kept for the space of one month after the end of the term and no longer, and that those then attending shall be excused the residue of the next long vacation. And they shall be allowed 10*li.* towards the charge of their commons.

Order for the treasurer's proposals for rebuilding his chamber to be prepared, against Wednesday night.

PARLIAMENT held on 3 November, 30 Charles II., A.D. 1678, before [blank]. RICHARD POWELL, treasurer.

Auditors :—Farrington, Heath, Petitt, and Blincoe for the steward's accounts, and Pollexfen, Kelinge, William Petitt, and Goodfellow, for the treasurer's accounts.

Order that William Minors, chief butler, shall pay to Thomas Jenner, an utter barrister, 3*li.*, for building a cellar chamber under the southernmost staircase in the King's Bench Buildings.

Order for the payment by those claiming interest in any chamber in the two staircases next the passage into Whitefriars in the King's Bench Building, to pay their proportions towards the building of those chambers.

Treasurer :—Sir Thomas Hanmer, the Queen's solicitor general.

BENCH TABLE ORDERS.

BENCH TABLE held on 3 November, 1677.

The petition of the gentlemen concerned in the buildings lately burnt, referred to Milton, Farrar, and others.

BENCH TABLE held on 5 November, 1677.

Order that Hampson, West, Edwards, Pollexfen, Farrington, Heath and Keeling be a committee to treat with the masters of the bar and the gentlemen under the bar concerning a contribution for alteration of the seats in the church and repairing of the church.

BENCH TABLE held on 9 November, 1677.

Order that Sir Robert Sawyer, Sir Thomas Foster, Farrar, Milton, Hampson, West, and Holloway be a committee to attend with the treasurer upon the judges of the King's Bench on Saturday morning, 10th November, 1677, touching Clifford's Inn, at the side bar, and to move them that Ince, of that Inn, may be forejudged that court. Memorandum :—Copies of the orders of 6 Charles I. and the orders made by this table in Ince's case.

BENCH TABLE held on 10 November, 1677.

Order that all those who are interested in the late burnt buildings, called King's Bench Buildings, and who intend to build, do give in their names to the treasurer before the last Sunday in this Michaelmas term.

BENCH TABLE held on 24 November, 1677.

Order that the treasurer do pay 10*li.* to Mr. Adams for the map he presented to this society, which is now hanging in the Parliament Chamber.

BENCH TABLE held on 29 November, 1677.

Upon the report of the committee appointed to inquire as to the interest of those who suffered in the late fire in the King's Bench Buildings, as to the number of lives and assignments to be granted, it was proposed that the building be built upon the same foundations in the front to the walks, as formerly, and 38 ft. "from out to out in depth," and a brick wall be built next the White Friars and a space to be left between the wall and the building; the building to be three pair of stairs high and no more, besides the ground chambers and cellars. The table agreed to the said proposals and ordered that Robinson and others be a committee to settle all differences touching the said building.

BENCH TABLE held in the Parliament Chamber, on Friday night, 15 February, 1677-8. Present: POWELL, treasurer, SIR THOMAS HANMER, FINCH, and ROBINSON, of the bench; PEACHEY, BLINCOW, JOHN POWELL, and HALES, of the bar, and NICHOLAS HOOPER, of the masters' commons.

Orders as to the rating of commons and that every barrister and student who went out of commons upon Thursday night in the said grand week, or was visus in villa and had not a chamber, should pay 8s. 6d. a man for the week, and those who come into commons again in the week after the grand week, and were visus in villa and have chambers, should pay 3s. 6d. a week, and a roll be kept of the same.

BENCH TABLE held on 9 May, 1678.

Order that the treasurer, Robinson, and others, be a committee to consider Livesay's proposals, the building by William Minors, the butler, and the shed of the joiner.

BENCH TABLE held on 18 June, 1678.

Order that Simpson's proposal for himself and others for rebuilding Paper Buildings be sent in writing to the treasurer.

Report of the treasurer, upon his conference with a surveyor and workmen touching the building of the intended King's Bench office. The surveyor and workmen were of opinion that it would not cost above 90*li.* or 100*li.* to build with four chambers under the office, and if such chambers were sold at 80*li.* each for one life it would help to reimburse the society. It was therefore ordered that the said chambers should be built.

Order that William Minors may enclose a piece of ground, part thereof to be employed for a garden, and may build on the other part adjoining the wall next the White Friars, lying between the Engine House on the south and the brick wall going from the said Minors' building towards the White Friars on the north. And the said Minors to deliver up his interest in a chamber under Serjeant Simpson's, and may take down the porter's lodge and convert the materials to his own use, filling up the ground at his own cost.

Order for a step of the King's Bench Buildings to be lowered.

BENCH TABLE held on 10 (sic) June, 1678.

Orders for the payments of commons by those in arrear, and for Baynes, Levett, Danvers, Bridges, and Guillim to attend the table to show cause why their chambers should not be seized for non-payment of commons.

An act for building the staircase now set out in Hare's Court, adjoining to Pump Court, upon part of what was formerly the Middle Temple ground in Pump Court, and upon the waste ground in Hare's Court, and part of the old building there to be built according to the model now agreed upon by both Houses, before the lord chancellor. Which staircase is to contain 54 ft. in front from east to west, and 42 ft. in depth from north to south. Further particulars of the building set out and regulations as to the lives and assignments granted to those undertaking the building.

Act that the toft where William Pettit's chamber stood before the fire shall be rebuilt in manner following, "First that an arch of five foot between the walls, shall be left against the church, between the building now standing and the building to be new raised upon the said toft, and that the toft or soil where the old passage into the Cloisters was, shall together with the aforesaid toft, be built into one staircase, consisting of cellars, ground rooms, and three pair of stairs, without garrets, thirty foot deep from out to out, and fifty-seven foot in length, and a fire wall to be made next the building now standing, and that the staircase shall be placed uniform next the church according to the model agreed on, the ground chamber not to rise above six steps, each step not exceeding seven [inches?] to a step in depth, and the outside of the lowest step to be pitched even with the outside of the said building." Pettit shall build the ground chambers; Gardner the chamber one pair of stairs, over the new arch; Wyott, Munday, Roberts, and Buckle to build the other chambers in the said building. The ground floor and one pair of stairs not to exceed 10 ft. in height from floor to ceiling, and the chambers two pair of stairs not to exceed 9 ft., and the north end of the said staircase to be rebuilt next Hare Court with a cant of 3 ft., if so great a cant be found necessary for preserving the ancient lights in the old buildings. Provisions for the nomination of lives and assignments to the said building.

Agreement between the treasurers and masters of the bench of the Inner Temple and Sir John Heath, of the bench. That Sir John Heath, his executors, administrators, and assigns shall at his or their costs and charges rebuild two storeys high over those butteries, called the Inner Temple outward and inward butteries, according to the same dimensions for length and breadth from out to out, and with such outlets to the north, not exceeding the extent they were of before the fire, and with such chimneys and windows as he or they shall find most convenient, and shall have a staircase or way to the same on the north side over and upon Newman's lodgings as formerly, the first chambers of the said staircase not exceeding 10 ft. in height, and the second storey not exceeding $9\frac{1}{2}$ ft. in height from floor to ceiling, and a roof over the same of timber covered with tiles or slate, with liberty to erect garrets within the rafters, only for the accommodation of the said lodgings. The said building to be covered by the end of Michaelmas term next. Care to be taken for the preservation of the butteries from the weather. The said Sir John to have the material saved from the burnt buildings, and to deposit the rubbish in the low places between the walks of the King's Bench Buildings, etc. Provisions for the nomination of three lives, and for the said Sir John to enjoy all the place where his lodgings, burnt in the late fire, formerly stood, and as to his disclaiming any right to all other bench chambers. The upper and lower chambers to be considered but one chamber.

Order for the payment to John Stanbrooke of 15*5li.* for lime, formerly owing to Thomas Newman, bricklayer.

Order that Minors, the head butler, should be allowed 48*li.*, lent by him to the said Newman.

Order for the act of 3 February, 33 Charles II., concerning the examination of the debts of the House, to be revived.

"Whereas several great misdemeanours have been committed by several gentlemen of this society, both of the bar and under the bar, in Easter term last, by blowing of the horn for the meeting and assembling together in the hall, and passing several votes, and making orders, thereby taking upon them the government of the House, and threatening the servants of the House in case they did not set up the said orders at the screen of the said hall in the term time, contrary to all the ancient usages of this House, forthwith three of the said utter barristers, that is to say, Mr. Grimbald Paunceford (styled in one of the said orders speaker of the parliament), and Mr. Daniel Foucaut, for threatening one of the butlers of this society, and Mr. Robert Blaney, for subscribing their said orders, styling himself clerk of their said parliament, being by the order of the bench table put out of commons, and the said Mr. Blaney after he was so put out of commons committing the same offence the second time, and being sent for to come up to the bench table and there refusing to answer to such questions as were demanded of him, was, by like order of the said table expelled this society. Whereupon the rest of the barristers and students going out of commons in Trinity term following, countenancing the said offenders and not coming into commons in the beginning of the Michaelmas term, application was made by the bench to my Lord Chief Justice Pemberton and the rest of the judges formerly of this society, and thereupon the gentlemen of the bar and under the bar immediately coming into commons in order to their being heard before the said judges, upon full hearing both of the bench, bar, and under the bar, the said judge declared the whole proceedings aforesaid of the gentlemen of the bar and under the bar to be contrary to the ancient rules or customs of this society, yet the said judges, making it their request to the bench to restore the said member expelled and those put out of commons, and all the rest of the gentlemen of the bar and under the bar the next day at the bench table end, making the said request for the said three gentlemen, it is ordered that the said Mr. Grimbald Paunceford and Mr. Daniel Foucault be admitted into commons at this time, without any further suit to be made by the three gentlemen or any of them to the benchers at their several chambers (according to the ancient usage in like cases) or any other act to be done by them notwithstanding."

Both of them to have the same terms as other builders have, who were burnt down at the dreadful fires happening formerly and of late in the society.

"Whereas by an order of the bench table of the 1 July, 1682, a committee was then appointed of the whole table or any six of them to be a committee to consider of a way in reference to a standing sub-treasurer of this society, as to what he is to do, both as to his receipt of moneys, the security that he is to give, and that which is to be incumbent upon him by way of duty in reference to the affairs of this House, and what allowance he shall have for such his employment. And in pursuance of the same order of the bench table abovesaid, the third day of July following, Sir John Heath, his Majesty's attorney general of the Duchy of Lancaster, Christopher Milton, Thomas Farrer, Charles Holloway, Richard Edwards, Edwin

Wyott, and Henry Selby, esquires, seven of the masters of the bench did meet as a committee accordingly, and were all of an opinion as followeth:—That the standing sub-treasurer that shall be agreed upon by this society shall receive all the rents, revenues, and casual profits of this society arising from all matters concerning the same, except the steward's rolls for commons, and dispose thereof by order of the treasurer of this society for the time being, under his hands, and not otherwise unless it be by the particular order of the bench table whilst they are in commons; that the said sub-treasurer shall every first week in every term give to the treasurer an account of what moneys he hath received in the precedent vacation, and before the end of the last week of the term, what he hath received in that term; that at the beginning of every term, in the first week, he shall give an account to the table of all persons in the society who are in arrear of any duties to the same, and refused to pay; that of all such accounts given, the chief butler shall make three rolls every Michaelmas and Easter term, to be delivered, one to the treasurer, one to the sub-treasurer, and one to the head butler; that no works shall be done by any workman employed in this society, or goods bought for their use but by order of the table or treasurer in term time, or of the treasurer in the vacation, or the senior bencher resident in his absence, to the contracts whereof the sub-treasurer shall be always privy and give an account to the treasurer of the due performance thereof.

“ That he shall give good security, such as the table shall approve of, for due performance of his duty, and true discharge of his account with three sureties to the value of two thousand pounds. That he shall have allowed to him for all the said moneys received by him for the use of the society, twelve pence in the pound. That every one admitted into this society by certificate from any Inn of Chancery shall pay to the under treasurer, for his own use, twenty shillings, besides the usual admittance to the treasurer of the House. That he have a convenient chamber allowed him during the execution of his said office, without being liable to be cast into commons for the same or other duties. That he be allowed out of the treasury every term during the execution of his said office the sum of five pounds. That the person to be admitted into the said office be Mr. Anthony Belbin, a member of this society. Which said report of the committee being read at this parliament, it is ordered and enacted that the said Mr. Anthony Belbin be settled, constituted, and appointed sub-treasurer thereof, upon the said terms and conditions in the report of the committee above mentioned, specified.

“Whereas an act for an aid roll hath lately passed in the parliament of this society for the rating the several members thereof, in relation to their several degrees, towards the repairs of the Temple Church and the new building the pews of the same, being much in decay (according to ancient precedents of acts of parliament of this House), the charge thereof being computed by Sir Christopher Wrenn, his Majesty’s surveyor general, and divers workmen, will amount unto at least the sum of fourteen hundred pounds, to be borne proportionably by the two societies of the Inner and the Middle Temple. And whereas by the great debts of divers gentlemen of this society in the payment of their respective dues upon the said aid roll so rated, this good work is like to be much retarded, if not totally laid aside, unless moneys from time to time be disbursed as the occasion of so great work shall and will require.” And whereas the present treasurer, at the request of the society, is pleased to lay down and expend as occasion shall require such money for completing the said work, although at present very inconsiderable sums on the said aid rolls are received by him, it is therefore ordered that the said treasurer, his heirs, executors, and administrators are and shall be saved harmless and indemnified for any contract he shall make relating to the said church or workmen.

THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, RICHARD EDWARDS,
EDWIN WYATT, LANCELOT JOHNSON, and others. SIR THOMAS

PARLIAMENT held on 19 November, 34 Charles II., A.D. 1682, before SIR JOHN HEATH, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Nomination by William Livesey of his two sons, John and Charles, to the King's Bench Office.

PARLIAMENT held on 23 November, 34 Charles II., A.D. 1682, before SIR THOMAS HANMER, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Anthony Bowyer, Francis Purley, William Farrer, senior, Alexander Stanhope, John Nicholson, and John Hodges fined 100 marks each, unless they pay the sum of 50*li*. and come and take their places at the bench table before next parliament.

PARLIAMENT held on 27 November, 34 Charles II., A.D. 1682, before SIR JOHN TREVOR, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

The gentlemen who were in commons for a week after the masters of the bench went out last long vacation, shall be excused from paying for the whole vacation.

The order for Anthony Bowyer, Francis Purley, William Farrar, John Nicholson, and John Hodges to be fined for not coming up to the bench when called is made absolute. The fine upon Stanhope for reasons given to the bench is totally excused.

Thomas Engeham, Robert Frampton, John Tucker, William Wright, and Philip Owen, called to the bar.

Order that all members of this society, who are proprietors of chambers that were burnt down, are appointed to nominate their lives, and particulars are to be given of those nominated.

PARLIAMENT held on 4 February, 35 Charles II., A.D. 1682-3, before THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, RICHARD EDWARDS, EDWIN WYATT, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Special admission of Robert King, eldest son of Sir John King, knight, deceased, late one of the masters of the bench, at the request of Sir John Heath, on behalf of Lady King.

“Whereas by reason of the great and frequent importunities of the young students of this society, who frequently press to be called to the bar, not having full time, and some of them not having done or performed any of the exercise of this House, and others very little, whereby the learning of this House is much decayed, and such persons, when called, very unable to perform the subsequent exercise of this House incumbent on them as vacation barristers, contrary to the ancient customs and orders of this House ; to prevent the same for the future a committee [was appointed] by virtue of an order of the bench table made 27 November, 1682." In pursuance of which order Milton, Farrer, Holloway, and Edwards did, on 29 November following, meet as a committee and were all of opinion, as followeth : "That no member of this society shall be presented to the table for to be called to the bar before he be full seven years standing and hath been actually in commons four years of the said seven, and hath performed the exercises following, viz. :—one imparlance actually to be performed, one library moot, six petty moots, and as many clerk's common cases, and in case of grand readings, four grand moots, and no call to be to the bar but only in Michaelmas term yearly." Which report being taken into consideration, it is ordered that no one shall press to be called to the bar unless he be qualified both for time and exercise, as this act before mentioned doth require.

Order for returning the exigents and suing out outlawries against Francis Berkeley, John Howland, Rock, Edward Thurland, Thomas Walker, John Allen, William Coode, William Gower, John Hillersdon, Samuel Howland, Edward Owen, Griffith Parry, Ramsden, Richard Sackvile, John Burroughs, Kenwick Eyton, and Thomas Foster, indebted to the House for commons and other duties.

The fines upon Anthony Bowyer, Francis Purley, and William Farrer for not coming to the bench table are remitted, they having conformed to the order made upon them and come up to the bench table.

Whereas by an order of the bench table of 31 January last, John Champion, Richard Ruth, and John Bagot, fellows of this society, were suspended commons for some outrageous misdemeanours committed by them in the late Christmas commons, which order of suspension by command of the bench was fairly written in the buttery book of this House by the chief butler in the presence of the masters of the bench according to custom. And whereas it appears that the said persons or others by their appointment obliterated and crossed out the said order, in affront and contempt of the government of this House. Whereupon by another order of the bench table of 3 February, it was further ordered that the said book of commons should be again brought up to the bench table and the said order of suspension again entered and written by the chief butler upon the same leaf where it formerly was written, upon the upper part thereof, and for the prevention of the like miscarriage for the future, it was ordered that the butlers do constantly keep the said inner buttery locked, according to the ancient orders of this House, and shall not permit any fellows to enter the said rooms to eat their commons or make any stay but only the masters of the bench, and such as are appointed to take the accounts.

Whereas John Champion and Heath Edwards, members under the bar, were with others lately summoned to attend the bench table to give an account of their late riotous and outrageous proceedings, in keeping the hall and other offices of this society against the present government of this House, "and hallooing and shouting with their guards and other rabble of people at the treasurer, the attorney general, and solicitor general, being the then masters of the bench that were in town, who came into the hall on the essoign day of this term after dinner, and did demand the possession of the said hall, library, buttery, and kitchen, for the use of the said society, and to disperse the tumultuous assembly, but were in a most insolent manner denied the possession thereof by them; and they did accordingly keep possession thereof, and gathered up new guards of mean persons to their assistance (about fourteen of their then guards leaving them), who continued gaming in the said hall until seven of the clock the next morning, being Sunday, and then prepared for a ball on the same day in the said hall, the which they kept locked with the other offices and places till twelve of the clock on the said Sunday, until the lord chief justice Pemberton, then chief justice of England, did come down in person, accompanied with the said masters of the bench and divers barristers of this society, and demanded entrance thereinto, they having not yielded obedience to his warrant the day before; and also causing money to be raised (being attended with armed men, their guards) on the respective members of this House against all ancient usage and custom and against their wills, extorting the same from them on pretence that some of the masters of the bench had paid ; and imprisoning several servants of this society for yielding obedience to the commands of the said masters of the bench of this society in leaving the said hall and attending on the said benchers. Upon which summons, when they appeared they were so far from acknowledging of the said offences that they justified their proceedings in a most insolent manner, and thereby aggravated their offences. Whereupon the bench taking the same into consideration, and that which never was paralleled in this House, did at that time suspend them, with some others guilty of the same offence, from the commons of this House, but finding the said persons still persisting to affront the government of this House and for preventing the like insolencies for the future," do hereby order and declare that the said Champion and Edwards be absolutely expelled and no longer reputed members.

PARLIAMENT held on 11 February, 35 Charles II., A.D. 1682-3, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Charles Bawdes and Cavendish Weedon called to the bar.

Thomas Jenner and John Wyne called to the bench, and the call of Ambrose Phillipps is adjourned till Wednesday next.

John Grady and Thomas Price, who were ready to perform Chancery exercise in Clifford's Inn, were allowed their exercise because they were hindered by reason that Fuller (who was to read there for Phillipps) upon hearing that Phillipps was to be called to the bench, did not proceed.

The fine of 100 marks on John Hodges for not coming to the bench is remitted.

Order for the parliament to be adjourned till Wednesday.

PARLIAMENT held by adjournment from the 11th to the 14th February, 1682-3, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, JOHN MOSYER, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Whereas the vacation barristers and gentlemen under the bar, in respect there is not nor has been any readings of late years in this society, and the next week being Shrove week and the four weeks after being reading month, wherein they cannot in accustomed manner perform their exercise until the five weeks be over, request that they may enter upon their exercise the next week ensuing. It is ordered that the said vacation barristers and gentlemen do accordingly enter upon their exercises.

Order, in regard to the great debts of the House that 50s. a week be allowed this vacation to the gentlemen keeping vacation commons.

Ambrose Phillipps called to the bench.

Order that parliament take into consideration the compounding of the vacations and amercements of all members who shall have discharged their commons, pensions, and preacher's duties by the beginning of next term and give their names to the sub-treasurer.

Whereas Heath Edwards, who with John Champion was of late justly expelled this House for riotous behaviour, has petitioned the treasurer and the rest of the bench to be restored, acknowledging his faults and praying their pardon therefor, it is ordered that upon the said Edwards paying all his duties he shall be restored.

PARLIAMENT held on 13 May, 35 Charles II., A.D. 1683, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

PARLIAMENT held on 24 June, 35 Charles II., A.D. 1683, before THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, RICHARD EDWARDS, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Whereas the buildings called the Paper Buildings in this society, being by their antiquity become ruinous and in decay, and not suitable to nor complying with the uniformity and beauty of the rest of the buildings of this House, several proposals have been received from and made to the present proprietors and owners of the respective chambers for rebuilding the same, but with little success, by reason of the particular and private advantages demanded by the proprietors, which the House could not agree to without loss; it is therefore ordered that the said Paper Buildings shall be rebuilt at the charge of this House, when the chambers shall come into the power of the House, and such lives as shall fall to the House shall be kept in the power of the House.

Order that members not in arrear with their duties may compound for their vacations and ameracements, at any time between this and the end of Michaelmas term.

Parliament adjourned till Thursday.

PARLIAMENT held by adjournment from 24 June, 35 Charles II., A.D. 1683, before SIR JOHN HEATH, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, EDWIN WYAT, and others. SIR THOMAS ROBINSON, treasurer.

Order that an act be prepared that no member shall be henceforth called to the bar without he have a chamber in this society.

Order that a letter be written to Francis Berkeley that if he does not pay his duties, that his chamber in Paper Buildings will be disposed of for the use of the House.

“Ordered that the case, prepared by Philipps, the joiner, for an organ which stands in the organ loft, prepared for the joint use of both the societies of the Temple, be removed, and that the said joiner have notice to remove the same out of that place, and if the same be not removed by Saturday next at noon, then the officers belonging to this House, namely, the respective butlers, with other inferior officers of this House, do in the afternoon of the said Saturday next remove the same out of that place."

PARLIAMENT held on 28 October, 1683, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR THOMAS JENNER, recorder of London, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Treasurer :—Sir Robert Sawyer, A.G.

The board wages of officers and wages of watchmen for the long vacation are referred to a committee, consisting of Sir Thomas Jenner, Holloway, Heath, Johnson, and Courtney, to examine the several demeanours of the said officers and watchmen in that time, and particularly in relation to the late fire that happened in Sir Thomas Robinson's Buildings, whereby the said Sir Thomas Robinson lost his life.

Auditors :—Selby, Pargeter, Dodd, and Leigh for the steward's accounts ; and Heath, Wyat, Pudsey, and Blincoe for the treasurer's accounts.

Henry Pollexfen chosen reader.

Order that those gentlemen who were actually in commons last vacation during the whole time commons continued, and went out with the leave of the treasurer and the rest of the masters of the bench in town, be excused for the remainder of the vacation.

John Cooke, chief prothonotary of the Common Pleas and an associate to the bar, is called to sit at the upper end of the bar mess.

Order that Mynors be restored into commons as chief butler, but not to intermeddle in the receipt of money.

BENCH TABLE held on 6 November, 1682.

Order that Anthony Bowyer, Francis Purley, William Farrer, Alexander Stanhope, Philip Pargiter, John Nicholson, and John Hodges, who were called to the bench, shall take their places at the bench table before Monday next, otherwise the bench will take it as a refusal and will proceed to a further call.

BENCH TABLE held on 27 November, 1682.

Order that a committee be appointed to consider what exercises are fit to be incumbent upon those to be called to the bar, before the names are presented to the bench table.

Order that Bowyer, Purley, Farrer, Stanhope, Pargiter, Nicholson and Hodges, who were called to the bench and refused to take their places, are fined 100 marks each, except Stanhope, who for reasons given to the bench, is excused.

BENCH TABLE held on 29 January, 1682-3.

Order for John Champion, Heath Edwards, John Bagott, Richard Rooth, and William Gwilliam, members under the bar, to attend the table.

BENCH TABLE held on 31 January, 1682-3.

Order that Champion, Edwards, Ruth, and Baggott be suspended commons for misdemeanours upon pretence of Christmas commons.

BENCH TABLE held on 1 February, 1682-3.

The complaint of Serjeant Buckby, concerning his chamber in the Inner Temple Lane, referred to a committee.

BENCH TABLE held on 5 February, 1682-3.

It is agreed to call Thomas Jenner, John Wynn, and Ambrose Philipps to the bench.

BENCH TABLE held on 8 February, 1682-3.

It is agreed that Charles Bawdes be called to the bar nemine contradicente, and Cavendish Weedon be called, but not sworn till he is of full standing.

Report of the committee as to the defects in Serjeant Buckby's chamber.

Upon the petition of Henry Chichester, second son of Sir John Chichester, bart., deceased, it is ordered that he be entered in the Book of Admissions, he having paid his admission fee in error to Minors, the butler, who had not accounted for it.

BENCH TABLE held on 13 February, 1682-3.

Petition of Robert Fenwick, vintner, for leave to make a vault in Hare Court.

BENCH TABLE held on 14 February, 1682-3.

Petition of William Gower, that he was about ten years since admitted at New Inn and remained there for three years, when, as by certificate appears, he removed himself to the Inner Temple, where he has resided seven years. In Michaelmas term he gave in his name to stand for the bar, and was rejected, but having "a tender of preferment," which, without being at the bar, he is incapacitated to accept, he prays the favour of the bench for the present call. It was agreed that as in this vacation there can be no call, and the petitioner not having performed his full exercise, he has an opportunity of qualifying himself against the next call.

Order "that whereas Mr. Smith and Mr. Harris, organ makers, have been employed by the treasurers of both societies of the Temples to prepare two organs respectively by them to be made, the said society to have the election jointly of that which shall be esteemed the best organ, both as to sound and price. The which organs, when made, were mutually agreed on by the said then treasurers to be set up in some convenient place at one and the same time, within one of the halls of the said societies, as shall be approved of by the said societies jointly for the trial of the said respective organs. It is therefore ordered that the said agreement be kept, and that neither of the said organs, so to be made, as aforesaid, shall be set up in the Temple Church, belonging to the said societies, until such organ shall be first chosen and approved of by the joint choice of the said societies, and after such choice then such organ, so chosen, shall be set up in the said Temple Church in that place appointed by the joint consent of both the said societies."

BENCH TABLE held on 30 April, 1683.

Order for William Pitt, the son of George Pitt, who has a chamber in the Cloisters, to attend and show cause why he should not mend his leads.

BENCH TABLE held on 1 May, 1683.

Order that Holloway, Selby, and Pargiter, shall make search in Hampson's Buildings, near the King's Bench Office, where several persons lodge with their families, that are not members of this society, against the orders of the House.

BENCH TABLE held on 4 May, 1683.

Order that Whitlocke Deane, Edward Deane, John Dolbin, and Francis Kellett shall attend the table to show cause why they permit strangers to lodge in their chambers; and that the fine on the baker for not supplying bread properly baked, be confirmed.

BENCH TABLE held on 7 May, 1683.

Order that the strangers in the chambers of Whitlock Deane and Edward Deane be removed, and that examination be made whether Cropley was admitted a member, or whether he is fitting to be a member of this House; and nomination of Basil Fielding for call to the bar.

BENCH TABLE held on 8 May, 1683.

Order that Milton, Farrer, Holloway, Wyatt, and Hodges, shall meet the masters of the Middle Temple in reference to setting up of an organ.

BENCH TABLE held on 14 May, 1683.

Orders for Cavendish Weedon to be sworn; and that John Stanbrooke have two concurrent lives in a chamber, in discharge of a debt due to him.

BENCH TABLE held on 15 May, 1683.

Petition of John Higden, who in 1622, became a clerk to Starkey, an attorney in Clifford's Inn, and was admitted to that society, that he may continue in the chamber of Whitlock Deane during the continuance of his lease thereof, or be admitted to the society pro tempore. Order thereupon that the gentlemen concerned in Serjeant Hampson's Buildings do attend the Bench Table touching the lodging of strangers.

BENCH TABLE held on 16 May, 1683.

Upon full debate it is not thought fit to admit Luke Cropley nor John Higden, members of the society, and order that they and all other strangers do leave their lodgings in Serjeant Hampson's Buildings.

BENCH TABLE held on 17 May, 1683.

Petition of Luke Cropley, that in 1681 he paid fees to Minors, the chief butler, for his admission to the Inn, and therefore hopes he has done nothing worthy of the bench's displeasure. Order thereupon that the matter be referred back to the committee.

BENCH TABLE held on 11 June, 1683.

BENCH TABLE held on 13 June, 1683.

Petition of Renuus Harris, organ maker, that having made an organ in competition with Smith, and being ready to set up his work, he has given Smith notice thereof, that both instruments may be set up at the same time in the same place, for the more equal and better trial and comparing of the stops by those organists and masters in music whom the societies shall appoint to judge which is the best. That Smith refuses to put up his organ, and his delays are prejudicial to the petitioner, who therefore prays he may be permitted to set up his organ on the south side of the communion table, and there remain till the matter in difference be determined. Which petition was granted by the bench.

BENCH TABLE held on 16 June, 1683.

It is not thought fit that Luke Cropley be admitted a member, and it is ordered that he leave his lodgings in the Inn.

BENCH TABLE held on 19 and 21 June, 1683.

Orders as to the rebuilding of Paper Buildings.

BENCH TABLE held on 25 October, 1683.

Order that Edward Herbert be excused his duties owing before the sale of his chamber to the Lord Chief Justice Jeofferyes.

The petition of John Blincoe, John Lee, Walter Burdett, and William Yorke, that they were admitted to their chambers by Serjeant Hampson, which chambers being lately burnt down, they pray that the benchers will set a reasonable value upon the Serjeant's interest, and order him to release his said interest. Which petition is referred to Edwards and Heath.

CHRISTMAS ACCOUNT BOOK.

ACCOUNT for Christmas, beginning 14 December, 1682.

The account is incomplete, and gives only the sum total expended daily during the first week, and a few details at the end, of no particular interest.

CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENT held on 14 December, 1682.

Officers:—John Champion, controller; Heath Edwards, speaker; Price, Rowth, and Edwards, stewards; Bagott, Warter, and Hart, the committee of music; Keilwaie and Jobber, auditors; and Gwillim, clerk of the parliament.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENT held on 18 November, 35 Charles II., A.D. 1683, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR THOMAS JENNER, EDWARD HERBERT, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

John Cooke, chief prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas, called an associate to the bench.

Whereas the gentlemen who were lately called to the bar and had no chambers at the time of their call, but entered into bonds to buy the same within a year, have greatly neglected the same, that in the two last calls, wherein there were twenty seven called not having chambers, two only have bought chambers, many of them so soon as they are called immediately leave the society and seldom appear again, not regarding the performance of the condition of their bonds, nor keeping their vacations, nor doing any exercise as they ought to do, which is the great cause that there has been of late such failure of exercise on the bar side, to the dishonour of this society, it is therefore ordered that no member shall be called to the bar without he has actually a chamber in this House or lays down 20*li.* as a caution to buy the same within two years, and in case of default the 20*li.* to be forfeited. And such as have forfeited their bonds, do, before the first parliament in next term, pay to the treasurer 20*li.* each, to be forfeited in case they do not purchase chambers within a year.

Order that the sub-treasurer and chief butler give an account what strangers lodge in this society, and particularly what women.

Upon reading the report of the committee that was appointed to inspect the demeanour of the officers and watchmen of this House this last vacation, and particularly in the time of the late fire which happened in Sir Thomas Robinson's Building, it is ordered that the two butlers, Berry and Smith, who were out of town, without leave, shall lose their board wages and the other officers and watchmen shall have their board wages and wages as formerly. And Rowland Morgan, the turnspit, for his extraordinary diligence in the said fire, shall have 40*s.*

SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR THOMAS JENNER, EDWARD HERBERT, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Charles Morgan, Samuel Dalton, Whitlocke Deane, John Churchill, Anthony Ellesdon, Simon Harcourt, John Dike, Henry Jones, Thomas Price, Robert Knowling, James Selby, and Charles Cooke called to the bar, but the three last are not to be sworn till next term.

Admission, ad eundem gradum, of John Nicoll called to the bar on 1 August, 1674, by certificate from Gray's Inn.

Order that James Munday, who has been master of the revels for two years and still continues so, may consolidate his two chambers in Pettit's Building opposite the church porch.

Whereas the sufferers in the late fire in Sir Thomas Robinson's staircase have desired leave to build their chambers, it is ordered they may do so at their own cost, three pair of stairs high and no more, besides the ground chambers and cellars, with power to nominate lives to the same. And that Sir Thomas Hanmer, the recorder, Holloway, Edwards, Farrington, Selby, and Courtney shall be a standing committee to settle all differences touching the building. The said builders shall also have liberty to make a gate in the Temple wall at the Thames side, and to land and lay materials, make mortar, and frame timber upon the void ground as former builders have done, making good the wall again.

Whereas upon the petition of the gentlemen that were lately burnt out in the upper staircase of Serjeant Hampson's building, a committee composed of Edwards and Heath was appointed to report upon the holdings in the said staircase, who reported that certain sums should be given to the said Serjeant for his interest, it was agreed that upon payment of the said sums the said gentlemen should be builders.

“Whereas the liberty formerly granted to the gentlemen of this society in the time of Christmas, intended only for a civil and moderate recreation, hath for many years past degenerated into licentiousness and disorder, to the great offence of Almighty God, the scandal and dishonour of this society, the corrupting and debauching of divers young gentlemen, members of the same, and (unless timely prevented may endanger the total subversion of the good government thereof) although great care hath been taken and divers good acts from time to time made for regulating Christmas commons and redress of such shameful disorders, yet they have always proved fruitless and unsuccessful, and have not produced that good effect expected from them. For the preventing therefore of so great mischiefs, inconveniences, and farther growing evils of this nature in time to come,” it is ordered that for Christmas next ensuing no commons shall be kept within this House, but the commons of this House shall dissolve and break up on the Saturday, after dinner preceding St. Thomas' day next, and not begin again until the Saturday night next ensuing the feast of the Epiphany, and in the mean time the keys and possession of the hall, buttery, kitchen, and other rooms and places of like public office for this House, shall be left in the custody of the treasurer, and if any fellow shall presume or endeavour to have commons kept during the time aforesaid, such fellow shall ipso facto be totally disabled from being called to the bar, and be subject to such other punishment as the benchers shall think fit to impose.

Order that all strangers lodging in this society, and particularly the family opposite Denington's chamber in the staircase next the Alienation Office, have notice given them by the butler to remove within a fortnight.

Order that such gentlemen as have paid their duties required by the Act of 24 June, 1683, shall have liberty till next term to compound their vacations and ameracements.

PARLIAMENT held on 10 February, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1683-4, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR THOMAS FARRER, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Order that a committee of the whole bench or any three of them do consider of a set of watchmen for this House to contain in number eight, four whereof to watch every night, namely, two at the gate, one in the King's Bench Walks and the other always going the rounds, and those four to have 12*d.* a night. The same committee are likewise ordered to inspect the casting in rolls for commons and to inquire as to chambers and nominations thereto.

Special admission of Thomas Wyat, eldest son, and Edwin Wyat, second son of Serjeant Wyat, late a bencher, at the request of their father.

The petition of the gentlemen that were lately burnt out in Serjeant Hampson's staircase to set their building a foot nearer Whitefriars is referred to a committee of the whole bench.

PARLIAMENT held by adjournment from the 10th to the 14th February, 1683-4, before THOMAS FARRER, CHRISTOPHER MILTON, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Upon the report of Holloway, Johnson, and Courtney, who were appointed a committee to regulate the watch, it is ordered that all former allowances to watchmen shall be discharged, and for the future there be eight watchmen as before set out. Of the four night watchmen, two are to watch at the Gate and the other two in the King's Bench Walks, one of whom is to go in turns, once an hour, the rounds, and up every staircase, knocking at every gentleman's chamber door, and giving notice of the hour of the night. And if the watchman that shall so go the rounds shall find any candle lighted after twelve of the clock, he is to continue knocking at the door until somebody give an answer, together with the reason. And the porter, instead of watching in term time, which he does by virtue of his place, shall constantly every night see the watch set, and in the morning the watch are not to go off until the porter comes to relieve them. And the watch to be set in winter time at eight of the clock at night, and not to go off till seven of the clock in the morning, and in summer, at nine of the clock at night, and not to go off till five in the morning. And if the under treasurer shall find the porter remiss in any part of his duty, the said porter shall, upon complaint to the treasurer, be put out of his place and in like manner as to any watchman.

Upon reading the report of Edwards, Johnson, and Courtney, the committee appointed to examine what profits were taken from William Minors, chief butler, by constituting an under-treasurer, it is ordered that Minors, in lieu of his admittance money (which was 5*s.* for every one admitted), profits of acts of parliament (which was 10*s.* a copy), and poundage for those moneys that he received, shall have three pounds a term out of the treasury, and 5*s.* for every gentleman at his first coming into commons, being introduced by him to the upper end of the bar mess.

PARLIAMENT held 28 April, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before SIR JOHN TREVOR, SIR EDWARD HERBERT, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Special admission of Leonard Poe Jenner, third son of Sir Thomas Jenner, serjeant at law and recorder of London.

Order that the casting in rolls for commons shall be examined with the Buttery Book by the under treasurer, and that no person nominated for a second life in any chamber shall come into commons for the first life.

Order that a committee be appointed to regulate the extravagant rates of commons.

Whereas the under treasurer was to hold a convenient chamber in the House during the execution of his office, and no convenient chamber has at any time since happened to fall, it is ordered that the sum of 10*li.* a year be allowed him for the rent of a chamber till a convenient one shall fall.

Order that the vacation barristers and gentlemen under the bar that were in commons last Lent vacation and went out with the leave of the treasurer, be excused from the remaining part of the said vacation.

PARLIAMENT held on 11 May, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before SIR JOHN TREVOR, THOMAS FARRER, CHARLES HOLOWAY, RICHARD EDWARDS, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Hugh Rydgate and Robert Dalway called to the bar.

Whereas great inconveniences have been found by reason of the gentlemen running in arrear for commons to very great sums, after which it has been found very difficult to have the same paid in, and by such arrears there is now due to the steward more than 1,500*li.* whereupon a committee was on 28 April last appointed to consider of means to pay the said debt who submit a report as to the payment of commons, which is ordered to be enacted and confirmed.

PARLIAMENT held on 8 June, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR JOHN TREVOR, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

William Hughes and John Dolben called to the bar.

Orders that gentlemen having chambers in Paper Buildings shall give in their resolution whether they will rebuild that building upon one life and an assignment ; and that the order of the bench table made about Sir Thomas Foster and Mr. Foster's duties be continued.

PARLIAMENT held on 15 June, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR JOHN TREVOR, CHRISTOPHER MILTON and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Robert Sanders called an associate to the bar.

Order that "Dr. Shirlock master of the Temple shall be allowed from this society the same salary that Dr. Ball had, which was 25*li.* a quarter during the time that he shall continue his place, the first payment to be made at midsummer next, and to be raised in the same manner as the said Dr. Ball's was, which was of every bencher, 2*s.* 6*d.* a term, every barrister that had a chamber, 2*s.*, every gentleman under the bar that had a chamber, 1*s.* 8*d.*, and every barrister that had no chamber, for every term in commons, 1*s.* 6*d.*, and of every gentleman under the bar that had no chamber, 1*s.* every term. And it is further ordered that the moiety of the rent of the said Dr. Shirlock's house be paid by this society during such time as the doctor continue master of the Temple."

The matter relating to Sir Thomas Foster and his son Thomas referred to the Table.

PARLIAMENT held on 6 November, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before SIR JOHN HEATH, SIR EDWARD HERBERT, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, RICHARD EDWARDS, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Auditors :—Johnson, Purley, Blincoe, and Webb for the treasurer's accounts ; and Pargiter, Hodges, Dodd, and Lee for the steward's accounts.

Order confirming the report of the committee that it is not convenient to alter the last order as to the watchmen's allowance, suggesting, however, a modification in the time of the watchmen's duty.

Whereas Jervase Berkeley, son-in-law of Courtney, of the bench, in Easter term, 1678, prayed to be specially admitted gratis, his request was denied as being contrary to the orders of the House, but having now paid 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for the same, it is ordered that he shall be generally admitted as of that time.

Poole Powell, eldest son of Powell of the bench, specially admitted as of Easter Term, 1682.

Order that the vacation barristers who were actually in commons the last long vacation and went out with the leave of the treasurer, shall be excused for the remainder of the vacation.

Order that Mrs. Farr, widow, at the Rainbow Coffee House, do pay yearly for enlarging two windows which look into the Inner Temple Lane, the sum of 12*d.* for each window at the Feast of St. Michael the archangel.

Order that the chamber of Richard Sackvile, padlocked for duties owing, be seized and sold to the use of the House, unless Sackville show cause to the contrary.

Officers :—Walter Burrell, controller ; Robert Algood, speaker ; Leighton, Anderton, and Warter, stewards ; Sympson, Dowdale, and Hussey, the committee of music ; Price, Chivers, and Grady, the auditors ; and Gwillim, clerk of the Parliament.

Orders that John Warter and Anderton have leave to resign the stewardship, and Jobber and Andrews do take their places.

MISCELLANEA.

1684, June 28. Certificate by John Colins that he being an officer of the society was employed in plotting the Brick Buildings in the Inner Temple Lane, erected in the treasurership of Prideaux, and of the passage out of the said Lane unto Hare's Court, there being no passage there before. And he states that special care was taken for obtaining convenient lights to every chamber on the east, west, and south sides, but on the north it was designed that the Black Building, when taken down and rebuilt, should be joined to the new building. He also remembers that on the west side of the Black Building, there was a court or yard, paved in and appropriated to the said Black Building, with a door into Hare's Court, which was used by Mr. Riden who held the Black Building as his bench chamber.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENT held on 27 November, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before SIR EDWARD HERBERT, RICHARD EDWARDS, PHILIP PARGITER, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Special admission of Thomas Heath, eldest son of Serjeant Heath, at the request of his father ; and of Thomas Twisden and Roger Twisden, sons of Sir Roger Twisden, bart., and grandchildren of Mr. Justice Twisden, deceased, at the request of their father.

John Champion, who was expelled on 4 February, 1682, for riotous proceedings in the time of Christmas, he being then controller, is, on his humble petition, re-admitted.

Order that no commons be held during the time of Christmas next, in the same terms as the order enacted on 25 Nov., 1683.

PARLIAMENT held by adjournment from 27 November, to 4 December, 36 Charles II., A.D. 1684, before HENEAGE FINCH, S.G., SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR JOHN TREVOR, RICHARD EDWARDS, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

Whereas divers proposals have been made, touching the demolishing and pulling down of the Paper Buildings, adjacent to the garden of this House, which by reason of their antiquity are not coherent and uniform with the rest of the buildings, it is ordered that all persons who have any chamber, or inhabit the said buildings do leave and depart the same, and remove their goods within a week after next term, that the building may be pulled down, and be rebuilt by the several persons interested therein, in likeness with the building, called Sir Thomas Robinson's Buildings, opposite the same, viz. :—four storeys high, the ground chambers that now are to descend with steps. And the said builders to enjoy the same during the life of any one person, a member of the society, and an assignment after the death of such person, and after the death of the life upon assignment, the chamber shall be at the disposal of the House.

PARLIAMENT held on 3 February, 37 Charles II., A.D. 1684-5, before SIR THOMAS HANMER, SIR JOHN TREVOR, SIR EDWARD HERBERT, CHARLES HOLLOWAY, and others. SIR ROBERT SAWYER, treasurer.

BENCH TABLE held on 26 May, 1685. Present :—The treasurer, SIR JOHN HEATH, HOLLOWAY, FARRAR, EDWARDS, JOHNSON, and others.

Orders that Henry Trinder be called to the bench; and that Levett, for breaking the padlock off his chamber and threatening "to pistol" the officers of the House, be expelled, unless he attend the bench table.

"The petition of Renatus Harris, organ maker, being this day read at the table, setting forth that your petitioner and Mr. Smith having originally stood in competition about the organ intended for the Temple Church, the said Mr. Smith did himself request the then treasurers of both Houses that he and your petitioner might work by fortnights alternatively, which being agreed by your petitioner, the said Mr. Smith did then make choice of the first fortnight and concluded your petitioner should end with the last, which method being so agreed upon, both the treasurers did accordingly order that the same should be exactly performed, and that neither the said Mr. Smith nor your petitioner should interfere in each others' time. That several times after your petitioner's intended last fortnight, the said Mr. Smith hath began again to work anew and never yet would declare to abide by any day to be concluded, although your petitioner hath not for four months together in the last term and vacation made use of any one day of his fortnight, but left the said Mr. Smith in possession of the church for all that time in hopes that he would have finished and appointed a day to have judgment given, till performance of which the said competition will never be ended.

“Your petitioner doth humbly request that Mr. Smith be sent to know if he have done, and in case he require more time he may now take it and make use of this week to make an end of the fortnight he hath began, if he require it, and that thereupon he may limit himself to a day, and your petitioner will do the like so many days after; the said Mr. Smith hath had more than your petitioner, otherwise in case Mr. Smith will abide by his organ now, your petitioner desires next week to be appointed for trial, or if he will make use of this week that such trial be appointed to be on the 15th, 16th, 17th, or 18th of next month. And your petitioner further prays that the persons to be appointed to give judgment upon the organs may be such as are most skilful in music and not members of either societies, to prevent any imputations of partiality. And that both workmen take a voluntary oath that neither, directly nor indirectly, they have given or promised or will give or promise any reward whatsoever to gain favour in behalf of his instrument to or with any of the persons, who shall be or are in election, to be appointed judges for the same. And because Mr. Smith do sometimes insist that he was employed by both Houses, that before any trial be made Mr. Smith shall relinquish any contract or promise, and that an order may be made wherein both societies may stand by the determination of the judges in the choice of the organ.”

Whereupon it is ordered that Holloway, Edwards, Johnson, Courtney, Bowyer, and Purley, or any three of them, be a committee to meet a like number of the Middle Temple to determine about the said organ and to nominate judges. They are also to take a note from each organ maker of their prices and the number of stops and pipes in each organ.”

BENCH TABLE held on 27, 29, and 30 May, 1685. Present:—The treasurer, SIR JOHN HEATH, HOLLOWAY, and others.

Orders as to chambers; as to nominations to the bench and bar (see Parliament of 31 May, with the addition of the names of Richard

BENCH TABLE held on 2 June, 1685. Present:—The treasurer, SIR JOHN HEATH, HOLLOWAY, FARRER, EDWARDS, and others.

The petition of Francis Shirley, panierman, for his expenses about the providing of wine, as his predecessor Roberts had, is granted; and order that Langley, for neglecting to perform the office of reader at Clifford's Inn, be fined 10*l*., and do provide for the reading for the two next terms.

BENCH TABLE held on 22 June, 1685. Present:—The treasurer, HOLLOWAY, EDWARDS, JOHNSON, COURTNEY, BOWYER, PURLEY, and others.

Communication from the Middle Temple reciting an order made at their parliament on 2 June, 1685, as follows:—"The masters of the bench at this parliament, taking into their considerations the tedious competition between the two organ makers, about their fitting an organ to the Temple Church, and having in several terms and at several times compared both organs now standing in the said church, as they have played several Sundays, one after the other, and as they have lately played the same Sunday together, alternatively, at the same service, now at the suit of several masters of the bar and students of this society, pressing to have a speedy determination of the said controversy, and in justice to the said workmen, as well as for the freeing themselves from any complaints concerning the same, do unanimously in full parliament resolve and declare the organ in the said church, made by Bernard Smith, to be, in their judgment, both for sweetness and fulness of sound (besides the extraordinary stops, quarter notes, and other rarities therein), beyond comparison preferable before the other of the said organs made by Renatus Harris, and that the same is more ornamental and substantial, and both for depth of sound and strength, fitter for the use of the said church, and therefore upon account of the excellency and perfection of the said organ made by Smith, and for that he was the workman first treated with and employed by the treasurers of both societies for providing his organ, and for that the organ made by the said Harris is discernably too low and too weak for the said church, their masterships see not any cause of further delay or need of any reference to musicians or others to determine the differences, but do, for their parts, unanimously make choice of the said organ made by Smith for the use of these societies, and Mr. Treasurer is desired to acquaint the treasurer and masters of the bench of the Inner Temple with this declaration of their judgments, with all respect desiring their concurrence herein."

"Upon due consideration whereof had, their masterships do unanimously declare that they conceive themselves to be not well used therein, that a resolution and determination should be made in a matter which equally concerns both Houses without a conference first had with their masterships, and that the same directly tends to a breach of mutual correspondence which ought to be maintained and preserved between both societies; that it is high time, and appears to be absolutely necessary that impartial judges (and such as are the best masters of music) be forthwith nominated by both Houses to determine the controversy between the two organ makers, whose instrument is the best, which this society are ready to do, and desire their masterships of the Middle Temple to join with them therein in order to the speedy putting an end to so troublesome a difference."

Holloway, Edwards, Johnson, Bowyer, and Purley empowered to enter into a treaty with a like number of the masters of the bench of the Middle Temple in order to settle the affair speedily.

BENCH TABLE held on 24 June, 1685.

"A paper sent from the Middle Temple in answer to an order of the bench table of this society, made the 22nd instant, being this day read, ut sequitur :

"Middle Temple:—Bench table, June 23, 1685. In answer to the paper sent from the bench table of the Inner Temple, the 22nd instant, the masters of the bench of the Middle Temple now in commons say,

"1. That they cannot imagine how the masters of the Inner Temple can pretend any ill usage or disrespect offered towards them, either tending to a breach of correspondence or common civility, by the act of parliament of the Middle Temple of the second of this instant June, for that the masters of the Middle Temple thereby only, on their parts, (with the concurrence of the barristers and students) declare their judgments and choice of Smith's organ, not imposing but requesting, the concurrence of the Inner Temple therein with all respect.

"2. As to the matter of having the two organs referred to the judgment of impartial musicians, there yet appears not any difference between the two societies concerning the same, the masters of the bench of the Inner Temple having not as yet in Parliament declared their judgments and choice of the other organ which if in their judgments they shall think fit to do, whereby a difference shall appear between the two societies, then their said masterships, now in commons, believe the society of the Middle Temple will find some other expedient for the determination of the said difference.

"3. As to the price of the organs, Smith, the organ maker, absolutely refuseth to set any price upon his organ, but offers to submit the same to the judgment of the treasurers of both societies or to such artists as they shall choose, which their masterships cannot but think reasonable.

"4. As to the numbering the organ pipes and stops, etc., their masterships think it below them to trouble themselves therein, because the proposal can have no other ground than a supposition of such fraud in the artist as is inconsistent with the credit of his profession."

"Upon due consideration thereof had, their masterships do unanimously declare themselves dissatisfied in the irregular proceedings of the Middle Temple in this matter, and therefore firmly adhere to their former resolution, viz. :—that there is no way to determine the controversy between the two organ makers, but by choosing impartial judges and such as are the best masters of music, and not members of either society."

BENCH TABLE held on 26 June, 1685.

Order for an augmentation of *6*li. to be made to Seth Elliott, the gardener, who has lost his sight; that the petition of John Collins, formerly steward, for payment of debts alleged to be owing when he left the office of steward, be rejected; that Legg be suspended commons for striking Thomas Smith, the fourth butler; and that Richard Owen, who was rejected from being called to the bar upon the suggestion that he was a practising attorney, be called nunc pro tunc.

BENCH TABLE held on 30 June, 1685.

Order for Edward Baldwin and the others lately called to the bench to come up to the table before Saturday next.

BENCH TABLE held on 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, and 7 July, 1685.

Orders as to the rebuilding of four staircases on the west side of Hare Court; that Finmore's request to compound for this vacation be denied; that his chamber in Fig-tree Court, sold to Richard Colvile, be viewed; that Clowes, Clendon, Peachey, senior, and Blincow for refusing to permit the table cloth to be taken away or to rise before the masters of the bench, contrary to the ancient custom of the House, on Sunday last at dinner, have a recipiatur entered upon their heads; that the gentlemen called to the bench have a further summons to come up to the table; and that John Vaughan's petition as to his chamber be referred to a committee.

BENCH TABLES held on 8 and 9 July, 1685.

Orders that Charles Meriton's chamber be viewed; that William Tempest's petition, as to his chamber, be referred to a committee; that the petition of James Anderton (who about seven years before was admitted of Bernard's Inn and transplanted himself to this Society, and having only a plain admission was rejected at the last call), praying that he may be allowed his standing and a call this term, be refused; and that the five bench chambers in the new building be wainscotted at the charge of the House, and all other ornaments convenient and fitting be left to the pleasure of the treasurer.

BENCH TABLE held on 26, 28, 31 October and 4 November, 1685.

Orders that Henry New, brother in law of George Warner deceased, late steward, be the new steward; that Thomas Smith, fourth butler, do collect the money due to the late steward; that the petition of George Warner, late steward, for a longer term in the shop adjoining the church, be referred to Holloway and Edwards; that at the desire of the Lord Chancellor and in regard that the grand day this year falls on a Sunday the same be kept on Monday following, being All Souls day; that John Blincowe and John Clendon, having made their submissions, be restored into commons; and that the two puisne butlers be amerced a mark each for not attending to open the pews of the church for the masters of the bench on Sunday last in the afternoon.

BENCH TABLE held on 26 November, 1686.

Petition of John Stacy, clerk, that he has for several years served the society by reading divine service twice every day in the Temple Church, for which he received from each House the bare salary of 15*l.* a year (without a chamber or commons), which allowance is so small (the great rates of lodgings and all other necessaries about these parts of the town considered) that he cannot pay for the ordinary conveniences of life. He therefore prays for an advance in his allowance. Whereupon a committee was appointed to meet a like committee of the Middle Temple.

Petition of William Kelyng that since the death of his father, who was chief justice, he has by fine and misfortune been reduced to great straits, and that by the cruel prosecution of a creditor he is thrown into the prison of Ludgate, where he is destitute of all means of deliverance. He prays that the bench will assist in his redemption from prison. Whereupon it was considered that as he is not a member of this society no order should be made.

BENCH TABLE held on 29 November, 1686 and 29 January, 1686-7.

Orders that the nuisances in the new buildings be viewed; that Harris, the organ maker, be paid the further sum of 100*l.* upon security of his bond; and that payment of duties and commons be made.

BENCH TABLE held on 3 and 5 February, 1686-7.

Orders for Deane, Wynne, and Fell to attend the table; that certain chambers be viewed; that Brocas Gardiner, who has been near four years in commons, and rebuilt his chamber in Serjeant Hampson's building which was burnt down, be called to the bar, he having an unexpected opportunity of advantage abroad requiring that qualification; that Richard Edwards, son of Edwards of the bench, be called to the bar; that Martin Hildesley, upon his Majesty's special recommendation, be called to the bar; and that further proceedings in this call be respited till the last parliament of this term.

BENCH TABLE held on 7 and 10 February, 1686-7.

Orders that the cellars in Sir Robert Sawyer's Buildings and the new chimneys made since the building was erected, be viewed; upon the petition of Seth Elliott and Jane, his wife, who have "been both dark for several years," that 5*li.* per annum be added to their salary; and nomination of those called to the bar at the parliament held on 11 February.

BENCH TABLE held on 11 and 12 February, 1686-7.

Orders that upon Winne's denying that there had been any digging under his ground chamber in the new buildings, a second view thereof be taken; that Roger Jenyns may change the lives in his chambers; that a further 30*li.* be allowed the masters of the bench, towards wainscotting of their bench chambers.

BENCH TABLE held on 22, 25, and 26 April, 1687.

Orders that 5*s.* a week be allowed to Edward Burton, the second cook, he being hurt in his side by spitting the chines of beef on the eve of Grand day; and as to Cooke's chamber; and that the petition of John Adams that his duties may be remitted, be referred to a committee.

BENCH TABLE held on 7, 8, 11, and 13 June, 1687.

Orders for the building over the arch in the passage into Mitre Court, to be viewed; that the exercise butler give notice to Trinder and Fuller to attend the exercise of the House; that Fuller attend the table to show cause why he did not attend the exercise; that all judges and serjeants that are called from this society have notice to quit their chambers; that John Prinn, for presuming to come into commons without giving bond, and refusing to come to the upper mess of the bar, be suspended commons; and that the chambers of Adams and Dalton be viewed.

BENCH TABLE held on 26, 27, 28, and 29 October, 1687.

Orders that John Cressett be appointed master of the revels in the place of Charles Cooke, deceased; that Bowyer and Purley do wait on the lord chancellor and master of the rolls to invite them to dinner on Grand day next; that William Farrer and Fuller do wait on the judges and serjeants to invite them to dinner on the same day; that Chaire's chimney and others of a like nature be viewed; that Prinn be restored into commons; and that various chambers be viewed.

Order that a committee do treat with the Middle Temple upon the matter of their pulling up the rails in the Temple Lane, erected for securing the Crown Office Building, and to settle the place for the erection of such rails; also as to a conveyance to be made to trustees of both Houses of the ground or soil of the Temple; and as to the number of new lights to be set up in the society and their places and prices.

“Whereas the liberty granted formerly to the gentlemen of this society in the time of Christmas, intended only for a civil and moderate recreation, hath for many years past degenerated into licentiousness and disorder, to the great offence of Almighty God, the scandal and dishonour of this society, the corrupting and debauching of divers young gentlemen, members of the same, and unless timely prevented may endanger the total subversion of the good government thereof; and although great care hath been taken and divers good acts from time to time made for regulating Christmas commons and redress of such shameful disorders, yet they have always proved fruitless and unsuccessful, and have not produced that good effect expected from them. For the preventing therefore of so great mischiefs, inconveniences, and farther growing evils of this nature in time to come, it is upon full debate and consideration thereof had at this parliament, enacted, that for the time of Christmas now next ensuing, no commons shall be kept within this House, but the commons of this House shall dissolve and break up on the Saturday preceding St. Thomas’ day next, and not begin again until the Saturday night next ensuing the feast of the Epiphany, and in the mean time the keys and possession of the hall, buttery, kitchen, and other rooms and places of like public office for this House,” shall be left with the treasurer. And if any fellow shall, contrary to this act, presume or endeavour to have commons kept during the time aforesaid, he shall ipso facto be totally disabled from being called to the bar, and be subject to such other punishment as the bench shall impose.

Nov. 9.—Orders that Berkley may make a new pair of stairs from his chamber door upward; that the expulsion of Wynn, an utter barrister, be confirmed; and that the report of the committee concerning the Crown Office be adopted.

Nov. 23.—Orders as to admittances to and assignments of chambers; and that Edward Baldwin, who was chosen reader on 12 May, 1689, and neglected to pay his reading money, be disbenched and fined 100*l*.

Nov. 23, by adjournment.—Order “that the sum of 50*l*. be paid into the hands of Dr. William Sherlock, master of the Temple, to the end the said master may therewith satisfy the persons who, by his procurement, preached in the Temple Church during the time of the said Dr. Sherlocke’s deprivation, in full discharge of the salary or stipend allowed unto the said Dr. Sherlock for Easter and Trinity terms last. And it is further ordered that the said Dr. Sherlock be paid for this present term and the terms following according to former allowances, till further order to the contrary.”

FEB. 11.—Special admissions of Selden Vaughan, second son of Edward Vaughan and grandson of the late Lord Chief Justice Vaughan; of Francis Bostock Fuller, youngest son of Francis Bostock Fuller, serjeant at law, at the request of his father; and of Thomas Clendon, son and heir apparent of John Clendon, at the request of his father.

MAY 22.—Thomas Trevor is chosen reader for Trinity vacation.

MAY 24.—Special admission of John Cooke, son of John Cooke, chief prothonotary of the court of Common Pleas and an associate of the bench, as of Michaelmas term, 1689, at the request of his father, and not of right.

The election of a bench chamber, heretofore Mr. Grant’s, and forfeited to the House by his expulsion, is adjourned to the table.

Samuel Crispe, John Clayton, Francis Eyton, Richard Lydall, Thomas Parker, William Adams, Edward Floyd, Oliver Tench, John Beresford, William Gamull, William Eyton, John Isham, William Lightfoote, and Roger Acherley called to the bar, and the said Beresford, Gamull, William Eyton, Lightfoote, and Acherley are not to be sworn till they are of full standing.

Order that the matter be respited touching the vacation barristers and gentlemen under the bar, who were in commons last Hilary vacation, and went out of commons with the leave of the treasurer.

JUNE 21.—John Beresford, William Gamull, William Eyton, William Lightfoote, and Roger Acherley called to the bar, notwithstanding the act of parliament of 24 May last to the contrary.

JUNE 29.—“Whereas it hath been found by experience of this society and other societies of the Law that the yearly constituting of a new treasurer in the term of St. Michael or at the death or removal of the present treasurer, doth much conduce to the ascertaining the revenue and other benefits of the society, Be it therefore enacted by this present parliament that no treasurer of this society shall continue in the office of treasurer longer than for the space of one whole year, and that a new treasurer shall be every year constituted and made at the second parliament in Michaelmas term (except the next immediate treasurer, who shall be constituted and made at the last parliament to be held for this society in Michaelmas term next, and not before). And be it further enacted that the said office of treasurer shall be executed by all the benchers of this society that have been or are liable to be readers, successively and in their turn, according to their respective seniority at the bench, and that no counsel of their present Majesties or their successors or any other person whatsoever, shall hereafter be constituted or made treasurer but according to their seniority in time at the bench of this society, except¹ such of their majesties' counsel as are now at the bench, and such as shall be hereafter attorney general or solicitor general to their Majesties or their successors, who shall and are hereby intended to be capable of the said office of treasurer of this society (for one year and no longer), according to their precedence without regard had to their seniority, anything in this act before contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

“Provided in case of the death or removal of a treasurer in his year the next bencher capable, as aforesaid, shall be constituted treasurer at the next parliament held for the said society, which treasurer shall hold the same for the said remaining part of the year instead of the said treasurer so dead or removed, and be continued for the year next ensuing at the second parliament in Michaelmas term.

“And for the encouragement of the treasurer of this society, hereafter to be yearly constituted and made, as aforesaid, in the careful attending and executing the said office, forasmuch as every treasurer of this society is by virtue of his said office obliged to his constant attendance upon the service of this House during the whole terms, and for perusing the several acts and orders of this House before they are entered, and in receiving and taking the several accounts of all sums of money received and paid out for the use of the said society, and for divers other matters relating to the said office (as is hereby declared he ought to do), Be it therefore enacted that the present treasurer and every other treasurer hereafter so to be yearly constituted and made, as aforesaid, shall be allowed upon his account the sum of one hundred pounds and so proportionably for the time of his service in the said office, and that no treasurer shall claim any further or other recompense or allowance for or by reason of his service in the said office.

“Provided also that no bencher of this society shall be capable of the said office of treasurer until he hath been at the bench for the space of three years at the least, except the attorney and solicitor general. Provided also that no bencher of this society whatsoever, shall be constituted and made treasurer a second time, until all other the benchers, who are or shall be capable thereof according to the true intent and meaning of this Act, shall have first held and served in the said office, except in the case of death or removal, as aforesaid. Provided always and it is hereby declared and enacted that no treasurer of this society ought or shall pay or dispose of any sum of money exceeding the sum of five pounds, without the order of the table first had and made for that purpose, and that no surrender to the treasurer of any chamber or interest in any chamber in this society shall be available, unless the surrenderer be in life at the time of the admittance of the surrenderee.”

“Whereas several questions have arisen concerning benchers taking place at the bench table of this society and their elections of bench chambers, Be it enacted that every king’s counsel that shall hereafter be called to the bench of this society shall take his place at the bench table and in all other public places of this society according to the seniority and time of being called to the bench and not otherwise, except in the case of their Majesty’s attorneys and solicitors general who are to take place of all other benchers of this society next to the treasurer and not otherwise, and that no king’s counsel shall hereafter have election of bench chambers that shall fall in this society but according to such their seniority and place at the bench table, as aforesaid, (except such of their Majesties’ counsel as are now at the bench and such as shall hereafter be attorney or solicitor general) who are hereby declared shall have priority of election of bench chambers as the same shall fall, according to their place of sitting at the table.”

JULY 1.—Confirmation of an order of the bench table giving license to William Clarke, second butler, to build a shop on the waste ground by the bog-houses.

Nov. 6.—John Osborn, K.C., chosen reader.

Special admission of Edward Ward, son and heir apparent of Edward Ward, bencher and reader, at the request of his father.

Nov. 19.—“Whereas by the usage and custom of this society the choice of chambers by the masters of the bench hath always been and ought to be according to their seniority and priority of sitting at the bench table, beginning first with the treasurer and then the next to him, and so downwards, and whereas it hath been observed that some masters of the bench do from term to term absent themselves from the bench table and do not give their due assistance in the debating and ordering the affairs of the House and upholding the exercise thereof, and yet nevertheless will come and be present at parliaments held for this society and expect to vote and have their choice and election of chambers there, according to such their seniority, equally with those that are frequent in commons and do duly attend the business and exercise of the House, by reason and means whereof the business of the House hath been often neglected and the exercise failed, to the great prejudice and dishonour of this society.” It is therefore ordered that no bencher shall have a vote or election of a chamber at any parliament unless he shall have been personally present at the bench table and in commons two several days at least in each of the two preceding terms before such parliament, except upon reasonable excuse. Provided that this act shall not bar the king's counsel now at the bench, nor any attorney or solicitor general hereafter at the bench, nor any master of the bench that now is or hereafter shall be a member of the national Parliament, but that they and every of them shall and may have their vote and election of chambers at the parliament, notwithstanding their absence from the bench table.

Nov. 27.—Auditors for the treasurer's and steward's accounts :—Clendon and W. Petyt of the bench, and Tucker and Whitacre of the bar.

Treasurer:—Sir Nathaniel Powell, knt. and bart., K.C.

MISCELLANEA.

1694-5, FEB. 7.—Letter from the treasurer and ancients of Gray's Inn to Nicholas Courtney, treasurer of the Inner Temple, as to William Clerke, who was lately made one of the King's counsel, concerning whom there was a controversy with the bench of Gray's Inn, then likely to come under judgment of Lord Chief Justice Holt and other judges of that House. The treasurer and ancients desire to be informed when the said Clerke, who was admitted to the Inner Temple, was called to the bar and whether he had paid all duties, etc.

With the letter is a memorandum dated 25 January, 1689-90, of an appeal brought by John Fry, an ancient of Gray's Inn, before the judges that had been members of that inn, suggesting that he had been pretermitted in two calls to the bench, wherein several of his puisnes had been called, and had thereupon petitioned in pension for his call, and his petition rejected, so that he was only relievable before the judges. Whereupon Lord Chief Justice Holt, Baron Nevill, Mr. Justice Gregory, and Baron Turton, being assembled at the lord chief justice's chamber in Serjeant's Inn in Chancery Lane, the benchers insisted that it was an inherent right of the bench to judge who were fitting to be called to the bench and who not. The appellant read the orders of pension, and after long debate the appellant insisted that cause should be assigned against his call, and the benchers had refused to assign any cause, alleging they were themselves the judges who were fitting to be called to the bench. The lord chief justice declared "that the call to the bench was no matter of right in any person but was in point of government only, and that it was discretionary, and both persons and time ought to be left to the judgment of the bench in whom the government of the society resided; and that unless the appellant had been called and then disbenched, no cause need be assigned why the bench refused the appellant. And then the rest of the judges seriatim delivered their opinion to the like effect, and thereupon the said appeal was dismissed and the benchers did absolutely refuse to call him, the said appellant, to the bench."

FEB. 7.—Inner Temple. Reply by Nicholas Courtney, treasurer, to the above letter from the treasurer and ancients of Gray's Inn, stating that William Clerke of Tymworth¹ in the County of Southampton was admitted on 25 March, 1672, called to the bar in Hilary, 1679, and sworn in Trinity, 1680, that it is against the rules of the society to say with what duties he stands charged.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

The following are the names of the benchers who attended the parliaments during the year with the number of their attendances:—WILLIAM LONGUEVILLE, treasurer, 8; CHARLES WHITAKER, 8; JOHN HALES, 7; THOMAS PETIT, 6; NICHOLAS COURTNEY, 5; JOHN CLENDON, 5; WILLIAM PETIT, 5; SIR NATHANIEL POWELL, 4; JOHN HODGES, 4; ARTHUR WEAVER, 4; THOMAS TUTT, 4; WILLIAM FARRER, 2; THOMAS WALKER, 2; and WILLIAM TEMPEST, 1.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

The following are the names of the benchers who attended the parliament during the year with the number of their attendances:— ANTHONY BOWYER, treasurer, 8; CHARLES WHITAKER, 8; JOHN HODGES, 6; WILLIAM PETIT, 5; THOMAS TUTT, 5; WILLIAM FARRER, 4; JOHN MOSYER, 4; NICHOLAS COURTNEY, 4; THOMAS PETIT, 4; SIR NATHANIEL POWELL, 3; JOHN CLENDON, 3; THOMAS WALKER, 2; WILLIAM LONGUEVILLE, 2; WILLIAM BARNESLEY, 2; ARTHUR WEAVER, 1; and JOHN HALES, 1.

NOV. 24.—William Finch, Edward Hilyard, Edward Jennings, Michael Newnham, John Legh, and James Farewell called to the bench, paying 50*li*. each to the treasurer.

JAN. 31.—Peter Weston's call to the bar respited.

FEB. 9.—Order that the call to the bench of Edward Hilyard, Michael Newnham, John Legh, William Simpson, and James Farewell, of last term, and the act of parliament for the confirmation thereof, be repealed, they having neglected to come up to the table.

John Methwin, Robert Payne, William Barnesley, Henry Crispe, and John Goodfellow called to the bench, paying 50*li.* each to the treasurer, and Peter Weston called to the bar.

In respect of the honour his Majesty hath been pleased to confer upon William Broderick, esq., a member of this society, in constituting him his Attorney-General and Judge of the Admiralty for the Island of Jamaica, he, the said Mr. Broderick, is at this parliament called to the bar, and to be an utter barrister of this society.

MAY 2.—Edward Jennings chosen reader for the summer vacation.

MAY 17.—Special admission of John Bond, second son of Nathaniel Bond, serjeant at law, at the request of his father.

JUNE 22.—Nicholas Harding, William Milman, John Lloyd, Thomas Woodward, John Blencowe, John Weaver, Henry Andrews, John Peeres, Leonard Gale, William Triggs, and Thomas Brand called to the bar.

Nov. 10.—The election of reader adjourned.

Whereas the not frequenting of commons by the masters of the bench has been found very inconvenient and of ill consequence, and the exercise and good government of the House thereby neglected, and whereas Philip Pargiter, one of the masters of the bench, who according to the present rules and orders of this House is next in course to be elected treasurer, has been long absent and is not yet come to town, and the time of such election drawing nigh, it is necessary some provision be made in case the said Pargiter shall not appear at the time of election; and whereas John Hodges, one of the masters of the bench, who is next in turn to be chosen treasurer in case the said Pargiter does not appear, may not by reason of some particular circumstances he lyeth under be capable of constantly attending the duties of the said office, and yet nevertheless, he having borne all the usual charges of the House to qualify him for that office, it is thought just that he should have the benefit of the said office for his year, if any bencher will undertake to execute the said office for him gratis, which Anthony Bowyer, the present treasurer, has, at the request of the table and in respect to the said Hodges, consented to do. And whereas by act of parliament of 29 June, 1691, it is enacted that no treasurer shall continue in office longer than one year, by which it was intended that no treasurer should so continue in his own right, and that no treasurer should receive the profits of that office longer than one year, it is enacted that in case the said Pargiter does not appear at the next parliament, he shall have forfeited his right and turn of being chosen treasurer, and it shall be lawful for the present treasurer to be continued, so that the salary or payment of 100*li.*, usually allowed to the treasurer, shall be paid to Hodges as if he had personally executed the office. And it is further enacted that no benchman shall hereafter be chosen treasurer unless he shall have been in commons two whole weeks in each of the two precedent terms before such election, and shall have been personally present at the bench table two several days at the least in each of the said terms, except upon reasonable excuse.

Nov. 17.—Order that William Simpson, being made puisne baron of the Exchequer, be called to the bench, and he shall take place next to the treasurer, according to the dignity of such baron; he shall, nevertheless, be chosen reader “and shall sit upon exercise in his turn,” according to his seniority in being called to the bench, and shall have the choice of chambers, be chosen treasurer in his turn, and pay into the treasury 50*li.*

Auditors for the treasurer's and steward's accounts:—John Hales and William Barnesley, of the bench, and Richard Webb and Richard Baldwin, of the bar.

Treasurer:—Anthony Bowyer chosen in accordance with the act of parliament of 10 November instant.

MISCELLANEA.

1697, Nov. 22.—Depositions of Matthew Johnson, that about 12 o'clock or after on Saturday night last, "whilst he was lighting candles afresh, up in the back library," the master of the revels came up to him and asked him in an angry manner what was the cause of the stink in the hall, and at the same instant gave him a box on the ear. The examinant answered he did not know the reason of the annoyance, unless it came from the common sewer under the library. To which the master of the revels replied that the said examinant should go and see if that were the occasion, and as he was going down the back stairs, the master of the revels kicked him upon the back in a violent manner, but the examinant went to the bottom of the stairs and showed him where the grate of the common sewer was and from whence ill smells frequently came; and from thence the examinant went up the stairs again, and through the hall into the buttery, and some little time after, the master of the revels came down to the screen and charged the porters with permitting a person to come into the hall that was said to bring a close stool or bucket, upon which the examinant said that he believed no servant would suffer any such person to come into the hall. The master of the revels thereupon laid hold of the examinant by the hair and knocked his head against the pillar of the buttery door; and from thence led him by the hair to the screen, where he gave the examinant into the custody of Regnier, who also took hold of him by the hair. The master of the revels then went towards the officers' room, and called for the stocks, and this examinant hearing blows, which he apprehended some other of the servants suffered, and seeing two or three swords drawn, he forced himself out of Regnier's hands and ran down the stairs, Regnier running after him, crying, "Stop, rogue!" The examinant was stopped by two or three gentlemen in the cloisters leading into Figtree Court, who with Regnier lugged him up the hall stairs by the hair; and so soon as they had brought him to the screen, the master of the revels declared he would make an example of him, and struck him several blows with a cane on the left arm and side, and then forced him into the stocks, and put his leg into a little hole of the stocks too small for his leg, pressing the stocks down, whereby the skin of his leg was broken and the flesh bruised. And upon his crying out they put his leg into a bigger hole. There he sat for about two hours, being then released by the intercession of Henry Ashurst and Drue Dean. By reason of the said kick in his back this examinant is full of pain and cannot stand upright, nor can he sit or stand long in any posture, although he has used proper means by being blooded, taking inward applications and using sear-cloths and bathing.

William Norris and other servants depose to a like effect, all declaring they were beaten by the master of the revels and others.

1698, Nov.—Agreements, petitions, and other papers in a dispute between Francis Kellett, a member of the Inner Temple, and John Walthoe, stationer of London, on behalf of his son, John Walthoe, a member of the said Inn, as to a chamber.

“That the steward be allowed out of the treasury for every public grand day a sum not exceeding 20*li.* for apparels.

“That all gentlemen that have not chambers and owe 40s. be not admitted into commons in term or vacation before all be paid, under penalty of being turned out of commons.

“That all gentlemen that have chambers and come into commons, pay their commons every second term, and those that are cast in pay every fourth term.

“That the great expense of wine be lessened and none sent out of the hall. That the expense of oysters be moderated, and every repaster of a Friday in the winter terms to pay off 14*d*.

“That no bread, beer, or commons be sent out, and that a certain allowance of bread and beer be settled for the turnspits and dishwasher.

“That all gentlemen be obliged to give notice to the butler that keeps the buttery book, at their coming into commons and going out, which may prevent many inconveniences that do often happen.

“That the term commons do not commence before the first day of the term nor continue longer than the last, except to end a half week.

“That one of the butlers be appointed to give an account every day to the steward after dinner how many gentlemen eat in the hall, that he may the better know how to provide.

“That the gentlemen sup in the hall according to the order now in being, and not in the buttery or officers' room.”

Orders that an account be taken of all goods and utensils, with the beer and other provisions; and that the butler and underporter collect the commons and other duties in arrear.

Orders that it be referred to the treasurer to treat with the treasurer of the Middle Temple to contract for the repairs of the church and the master's house, as there shall be occasion; and that the treasurer take care to remove all the nuisances and everything that is prejudicial to the church.

OCT. 25.—Order that there be a grand day this term, and that Mr. Solicitor and Courtney invite the lord keeper, master of the Rolls, and judges; that Payne and Dodd invite the serjeants; and that the orders for the payment of commons, pensions, and preachers' duties be revived.

Nov. 28.—Order that 3*l*. be given to Eleanor Arnold, widow of William Arnold, late chief cook.

JAN. 28.—Order that the committee appointed touching the rights of the master of the Temple meet a committee of the Middle Temple.

JAN. 31.—Upon the report of the committee of both Houses appointed to consider the rights of the two societies and the master of the Temple, it was ordered that the said report be entered in the book of orders of this society.

The report is dated 6 June, 1706, "We, the said committees, having inspected and perused the books and entries of both the societies, do find and are of opinion that the Master by his patent is to find at his own charge the minister or reader and the clerk or sexton, and to officiate daily by himself or deputy, and by his patent hath a salary or pension from the Crown of 37*li.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per annum.

"We also find and are of opinion that the soil of the church and churchyard is in the societics, and that the ancient rates for burials in respect of the ground are as followeth: In the round walk and elsewhere below the chancel and aisle, 10*s.*; in the benchers' aisle, 1*li.*; in the gentlemen's aisle, 15*s.*; in the chancel beneath the steps, 1*li.* 6*s.*; in the chancel above the steps, 2*li.*

"Which rates or duties do belong to the respective societies and have been formerly collected and accounted for to them accordingly.

"We find that no stranger is to be buried in the church or churchyard, without leave of the respective treasurers.

"We further find that the ancient burying fees are as followeth, viz. :—To the curate for attending the corpse and service, 5*s.*; to the clerk for ringing the bell and attending, 4*s.*; to the grave-maker and for filling the grave and new laying the stone, 3*s.* 4*d.*

"But we do not find any sum mentioned to be payable to the master if he is pleased to attend or officiate himself.

"We find the rates now taken for the ground and burying fees to be as followeth, viz.: for all burials in the rounds, for the soil, 1*li.*; to the master, 10*s.*; to the clerk, 5*s.*; to the sexton, 2*s.* 6*d.*

"And in the aisles as followeth, viz. :—The side aisles, for the ground, 1*li.* 10*s.*; for the master, 10*s.* The middle aisles, for the ground, 2*li.*; for the master, 10*s.* In the chancel and vaults, for the ground, 3*li.*; for the master, 10*s.*

"And that all strangers pay double for the ground and to the master and officers, except in the chancel and vault, where strangers pay 4*li.* 10*s.* for the ground.

"And that the clerk and sexton take their fees as above for all these burials, viz., 5*s.* the clerk and 2*s.* 6*d.* the sexton.

the fees above mentioned for the ground as well as his own fees; and that these fees for the vaults have been taken and claimed by the master, notwithstanding the vaults were lately built by the two societies.

“We also find that Dr. Mittlethwaite, who was master of the Temple in King Charles the First’s time, did make several pretences and demands before the then archbishop, the Council Board, and Star Chamber, and that several hearings were thereupon had, and several references and reports were made thereupon, and his then Majesty’s Council advised with therein, and that respective rolls were ordered to be made by the societies the 19th May, 1637, to charge the members of the societies in commons with 18*d.* a year a piece. And afterwards, 2nd July, 1647, to charge the masters with 2*s.*, the barristers with 18*d.*, and the gentlemen with 1*s.* apiece every term. But that these were all limited during the pleasure of the societies by their respective acts, as appears to us by the entries in the books.

“And we further find that afterwards, in the late troublesome times, several temporary provisions were made for the then masters of the Temple, but that upon the Restoration, after several disputes, 24th November, 1661, the Inner House ordered 25*li.* per quarter to be paid to Dr. Ball in full of all dues and demands whatsoever, and for the better raising the same, ordered a rate to be made upon the respective members, but this not to be a precedent to any that should succeed him. And that Dr. Ball during his life received the said 25*li.* per quarter.

“And that by an act of the Middle House, 30th October, 1663, it is ordered that the master be allowed 70*li.* per annum for the present, to be paid half yearly in lieu of all chambers and payments whatsoever, and that the master during his life receive the said 70*li.* per annum.

“And we find that by an act of the 9th May, 1684, the Middle Temple ordered Dr. Sherlock to be paid 70*li.* per annum by half yearly payments, in lieu of chambers and all other payments formerly made to the master. And that the 15th June, 1684, by an act of the Inner House, Dr. Sherlocke was ordered the same salary as Dr. Ball had, viz., 25*li.* per quarter, to be raised as formerly for paying Dr. Ball.

“Upon the whole matter we are of opinion that the respective payments made by the societies, as well before as since the Restoration, were voluntary payments and not as of right or due, but were made to the respective masters pursuant to the acts and orders of both the societies, out of respect and as a temporary reasonable provision for them.

“We do find that the master did formerly lay claim to the several chambers and lodgings, but what right he had thereto or what in particular they were or the values of them does nowhere appear to us, but the payments have been made ever since 1661, as above is mentioned.

“Agreed—Committees of the Inner Temple: John Clendon, Tho. Walker, Rob^t. Payne, W. Barnesley, and Sam. Dodd. The Middle Temple: Pet. Broughton, H. Hetherington, Jos. Offley, and John Radford.

“And it is also ordered that the further consideration of the said report be referred to the Friday Committee.”

FEB. 1, 3, and 7. Orders that Henry Thompson attend the table as to a door made from his chamber; that the petitions of the gentlemen vacationers and Henry Graham be referred to the Friday committee.

FEB. 8 and 12.—Orders that the matter of the lamps be referred to Hales and others; that Henry Graham, upon surrendering his chamber, shall have a lease for eleven years at 5*l*. a year.

MAY 15.—Orders that a list be made of the names of the gentlemen that put themselves out of commons last Tuesday night, and which of them have chambers; and as to the payment of commons.

MAY 19, 20, 24, and 26.—Orders that 10*l*. be paid to the daughters of John Cressett, deceased; that Tooker's request to compound for his vacations be referred to the Friday committee; that Hodges and Davis each have 10*l*. towards repairing their bench chambers; and that Ruffles have eleven years added to his term in his house and shop upon rebuilding the same.

JUNE 21.—Orders that Dr. Sherlock be allowed 40*li.* upon the same terms as the Middle Temple make their allowances; that “it be referred to the treasurer to repair the east end of the church in conjunction with the Middle House”; that Jackson, the reader, be allowed 20*li.* per annum, and it be considered whether it is fit that the reader be allowed a chamber; and for the payment of commons.

JUNE 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 30.—Orders that Jennings be allowed 10*li.* towards the repair of his bench chamber; that Jackson, the reader, be allowed a chamber; that 5*li.* be added to the panier-man’s salary; that William Knight’s petition as to his chamber be referred to the Friday committee; and nomination of those called to the bar at the parliament held on 29 June.

JULY 2 and 4.—Order that the chief butler be restored into commons.

OCT. 28 and 29.—Orders that there be a public grand day kept on 1 November next, and that Mr. Attorney and Jennings invite the master of the Rolls and judges, and that Hare and Paunceforth invite the serjeants; and that a demand be made for commons in arrear.

Nov. 3, 7, 10, and 13.—Orders that certain chambers be viewed, and that William Knight be fined 20*li.* for altering his chamber without leave, and 10*li.* for encroachments upon the ground of the society.

1704, JUNE 28.—Bond by Peter Worrell, citizen and glover of London, to take Elizabeth Elliott as his apprentice for seven years.

1709.—Form of bond given by the library keeper of the Middle Temple.

[1709].—Act of Parliament made in the treasurership of Sir William Simpson. “Whereas William Petyt, esq., heretofore treasurer of this society of the Inner Temple and late keeper of her Majesty's records in the Tower of London, having collected a great number of books of law and history, antiquity and parliamentary proceedings, did, the twelfth day of July in the fourth year of her now Majesty's reign, annoque Domini 1705, make his last will and testament in writing and therein and thereby among other things did give and devise the said books of law, history, and antiquity and parliamentary proceedings (which cost him many years' pains and study and stood him in much charge in collecting) to Joseph Offley, esq., Richard Webb, esq., Humphrey Hetherington, esq., John Anstis, esq., John Chamberlaine, esq., and his brother, Silvester Petyt, his trustees, in trust and to the intent and purpose that they would use their utmost endeavours for preserving and keeping them safe and entire for public use in such place or places as they, or the major part of them, or the survivor or survivors of them, from time to time should appoint, and not to suffer or permit them to be embezzled or sold; for which purpose he did give one hundred and fifty pounds to buy or build a place and making it convenient for preserving and keeping them, which is to be settled upon his trustees or the survivors of them, or the heirs of the survivor of them in fee simple in trust, for the purpose aforesaid, and in and by his said will he did earnestly desire his trustees that they would in convenient time after his decease (in justice to truth and his memory) procure such of his manuscripts, as they should think fit, to be printed, to remain for public use to posterity. And in and by his said will he did give to the honourable society of the Middle Temple fifty pounds to be laid out by his executor to buy books, for augmenting their library, and he did give to this honourable society of the Inner Temple, fifty pounds, to be laid out for buying books, towards a library, here to be erected, and of his said will did make his said brother executor, who hath proved the same. And whereas application hath been made by several persons to the said trustees touching the disposing of and placing the said books in several places out of this society. And whereas several members of this society have desired the said books may be placed here and for that the said William Petyt in his life time when keeper of the said records in the said Tower of London, did invite many students in the law to go to the Tower to search and see the records there and take out of them what notes or abstracts they pleased, gratis, it was proposed by the trustees to such of the members of this society who desired that the said books might be placed here, that if this society would provide a place for a library for placing the said books and preserving the same for public use to all the purposes as mentioned, in and according to the true intent and meaning of the said will, that then the said trustees would consent that the said books should be placed in this society in such place which by this society should be provided for a library. And the said Sylvester Petyt would pay unto this society or such person or persons as this society should appoint, the said sum of one hundred and fifty pounds, given by the said will to buy or build a place for preserving and keeping the said books, which said members of this society did assure the said trustees that the said proposal would be very gratefully accepted by this society and performed in all its parts according to the true intent and meaning thereof and of the said will; and in pursuance thereof this society, at the proper costs and charges of this society for the purpose aforesaid, hath erected and built a very spacious and handsome room, wherein several of the said books are already placed and wherein the remainder of the said books and other the books which shall by this society be bought with the said fifty pounds, given as aforesaid, are to be placed, it is at this present parliament ordered that the thanks of this society shall, by the treasurer of this society, be given to the said trustees for their kindness and favour in consenting to and permitting the said books to be placed within the society, and it is enacted that when the said books shall be placed in the said library the same shall be preserved and kept safe and entire for public use, to all intents and purposes and according to the true intent and meaning of the said will, and that the said trustees or any of them or any person or persons employed by them or the major part of them, shall and may from time to time and at all times hereafter take copies or make abstracts of such of the said manuscripts, as they shall think fit, in order to be printed, to remain for public use to posterity, according to the directions and true intent and meaning of the said will. And it is further ordered that any of the said trustees shall from time to time upon request made to the library keeper, receive out of the said library at once, any one of the said manuscript books which he shall desire to have, upon the receipt whereof he shall give a note to the library keeper to return and redeliver the same safe and entire within two months after the receipt thereof into the said library, to be placed there, which the said library keeper shall deliver the same upon giving such note.¹ Provided that none of the said trustees shall have above one book at a time, and until such book be delivered into and placed in the library such trustee shall not have another, and upon the redelivering of such books, the library keeper shall deliver up the notes given for the delivery of such books respectively. And as to the payment of the said one hundred and fifty pounds, it is desired and hereby appointed that the same be paid to Sir William Simpson, treasurer of this society, who, upon the payment thereof to him, shall give such a receipt for the same in such manner as the said Silvester Petyt shall think fit to direct, and it is further ordered that each of the said trustees shall have a copy hereof attested by the treasurer."

Nov. 22 and 24.—Orders as to Robert Harvey's title to a chamber next door to the north door of the hall, over the new cloister, with a cellar belonging thereto; that Tobiah Harvey, having by his deputy performed the office of reader for Lyon's Inn, be discharged thereof, and at his request he be discharged from the society; that John Smith and Henry Box be fined 20*li.* each, for not reading at Clifford's Inn and Clement's Inn respectively; that the names of the following gentlemen be sent to the Inns of Chancery for the election therefrom of readers:—Clifford's Inn, Charles Morgan, Samuel Dalton, and Henry Sawyer; Clement's Inn, William Smith, Thomas Dunster, and George Sawyer; and Lyon's Inn, James Woodhouse, William Woodward, William Hanbury, Maurice Kellett, John Trenchard, and Henry Stevens.

Orders that all laundresses and others that empty close stools, etc., carry the same to the pump at the bog houses, and that no ashes or other noisome matter be laid in any of the courts, passages, or places about this House, but that the same be carried to the laystall belonging to this society. Further that no laundress or other person presume to empty out of any window any chamber pot, basin, or other thing, and that every person offending against this order shall forfeit 40*s.*, according to the ancient usage of this House, and that any servant of this House or other person that shall discover any offender herein, shall be rewarded by the treasurer. And this order to be screened up in the hall and put up at the pumps belonging to this society.

JAN. 29.—Order as to viewing a chamber.

FEB. 4 and 8.—Orders as to chambers and the payment of commons; that the steward's petition be referred to Barnesley and others; that the petition of the two cooks be referred to the Friday committee; and that the arrears owing to William Charke, executor of his father, late steward, be collected.

FEB. 9.—“Whereas, according to the ancient usage of this House, those who have actually performed the exercise called the imparlance have sometimes been amerced for the non-performance thereof, and also that those who do actually attend the performance of the said exercise are, for want of number, equally amerlicable with those that are absent, which hath been thought a discouragement to gentlemen being in commons and taking up the said exercise. The masters of the bench having taken this matter into consideration, and being more desirous to have the exercise performed than the non-performance punished, have thought fit to order and do hereby order as followeth, viz. :—

“1. That no gentleman under the bar that shall have duly performed the said exercise for any one term, shall from thenceforth be amerced for any future non-performance thereof.

“2. That no gentleman at the bar that hath duly performed the said exercise for any one term, shall from thenceforth be amerced for any future non-performance thereof.

“3. That no gentleman at the bar or under the bar that is present and attends the performance of the said exercise, shall be amerced for want of number, but those only that are absent shall be amerced, whether of the bar or under the bar, respectively, according as the failure is on the one part or on the other.

“Provided that nothing in this order contained shall be construed to excuse the masters of the bar mess, when the exercise is tendered by the gentlemen under the bar and taken up by the bar, from any default of going down into the Rounds, or about breaking the case there, or giving due commencement to the said exercise, according to the usage of the House.

“Provided also that nothing herein contained be construed to excuse any gentleman of the bar or under the bar, who shall have actually performed the said exercise, from his attendance upon the performance thereof by others, according to the usage of the House in such manner, as if this order had not been made.

“Lastly that it may not be in the power of the bar, by their default, to prevent the gentlemen under the bar from the benefit of this exercise, it is further ordered that in case the exercise be taken up in due time by the gentlemen under the bar, and they continue to tender during the terms, and the exercise be not taken up by the bar, or if it be taken up by the bar, and they make default, and there be no default or failure on the part of the gentlemen under the bar, this shall be allowed to such gentlemen under the bar for an exercise duly performed."

Orders that no brass, pewter, copper, iron, or tin vessels, dishes, or plates be carried from the hall, buttery, or kitchen.

FEB. 11.—Order for viewing Newnham's chamber.

APPENDIX No. II.

ARGUMENT BY SIR HENEAGE FINCH

AS TO THE TEMPLE BEING WITHOUT THE JURISDICTION OF THE CITY OF LONDON. A.D. 1669.

Inner Temple Library, Petyt MSS., No. 538, vol. 17, fol. 388.

In¹ this question between the Temple and the City there are two things considerable,

1. The right prætended to on each side.
 2. The way and means of asserting that right.
1. As to the point of right these things may be fitt to be consider'd.
 1. What is not the Question.
 2. What the grounds are upon which the Temple claym to be exempted from the jurisdiction of the City.
 3. Upon what grounds the City do oppose that clayme.
 4. The great inconveniences if the priviledge of the Temple be not in some measure continued.
 5. The no inconvenience to the City by the continuance of it.

I. First then it is not the question whether the Temple be in London, that is confest of all hands, much less is it a question of personall respect or disrespect to the Lord Maior and Aldermen that now are, for never was the City governed by a maior and aldermen more known and better respected then every one of these are. But the true question is whether the Temple, though in London, be not a place exempted from their jurisdiction as many other places in London heretofore were, and as at this day some are, viz:—St. Martins le Grand, etc.

II. Now the Temple conceive themselves to be exempted upon these grounds.

1. They doubt not to prove that the soyl whereupon the Inner Temple and most part of the Middle Temple stands, was antiently exempted when it was in the possession of the Knights Templars.
2. That by their dissolution it came to Thomas, Earle of Lancaster and Leycester, as belonging to the Honour of Leycester and continued exempted till by Act of Parliament, it was settled on the Hospitellers, who held it exempted till the dissolution.
3. That by the dissolution of monasterys it came to the Crown and continued there as a separate Franchise till the pattent of 6th Jacobi.
4. That by the pattent of King James the soyl is granted away with generall words sufficient to revive and continue all antient priviledges.
5. That accordingly the Temple hath enjoyed y^e priviledge ever since the dissolution of monasterys, though all occasions of bringing this point into question have been avoyded on both sides, as much as might be.
6. That in the late times when the government was by an army and great courtship made to the City, yet they were never suffered to exercise any kind of authority in the Temple.

III. The reasonablnes of this will better appear if it be considered upon what grounds the City claime a jurisdiction in the Temple, which are very weak. For

1. The City have no Charter which by any express words puts this place under their power, and the meer scituation in London will not do it if there be a right of exemption.
2. They have expresse words in the charter granted by King James by which Coleherbert, Smithfield, Black-friers, and White-friers are added to their jurisdiction which shews that without these speciall words the exemptions, which the antient monasterys enjoyed, had still continued.
3. That which is yet more remarkable is, That the pattent granted by King James to the City of London bears date 14 dayes after the Grant made to the Temple, and therefore no generall words in the City Charter can subject y^e Temple which was exempted before.

IV. The inconveniences were insupportable if there should be a right in the City of jurisdiction in the Temple,

1. Where the City hath a right of jurisdiction, they may by Act of Comon Councill impose taxes, make parish Officers, Scavengers, etc.
2. If the City have jurisdiction in the Temple, a pleint entered in the Counter, without his Majesties writ, will be a sufficient warant to arrest any man in the Temple, Then can no debtor in a long vacation come to a lawyer's chamber for counsell.
3. No lawyer can sit safe in his study for he by his profession is bound to keep his chamber doors open, and then any City officer may come in and fetch him out of his study and carry him to prison.
4. Many lawyers are trusted with keeping of the evidences of divers gentlemen, but if the City have a jurisdiction they may by a pretended execution in a long vacation, take all the books and trunks in a lawyer's chamber, and so many may come to loose their evidences.
5. This at last must dissolve the societies of the Temples and cause all students to admitt themselves of Lincoln's Inn or Gray's Inn out of my Lord Maior's reach.

V. The City suffers no inconvenience by the continuance of this priviledge. For

1. 'Tis not a priviledge against his Maj^{ty's} writts nor against any commands of the Great Seal but onely against y^e sergeants, bailiffs and officers of the Counter.
2. Even in these cases it is familiar upon due application made and leave obtained to connive at the proceedings.
3. Where leave cannot be had to do that, yet a process of outlary is never resisted, for that is his Ma^{ty's} suit and contains in itsel^fe a Non omittas propter aliquam libertatem so the creditor is at no great delay.
4. If it be said that sometimes bankrupts are sheltered here, that may be said as well against the Libertie of S^t Martin's le Grand, and indeed against all liberties. But 'tis denied that ever there were three cases of that nature, for upon information to the benchers that they are no members of this society, they are usually delivered up.

So 'tis conceived upon the whole matter that the claims made by the Temple to this priviledge are either very justifiable or at least very excusable.

In the last place as to the wayes and meanes which have been used in asserting this right it is humbly prayed.

1. That the right it selfe may not receive any prejudice or diminution by any ill circumstance in the defence of it.

2. If anything have been done against y^e lawes of hospitality or good manners they beg pardon for it with all the submissions that can be. But they hope the contrary will appear, and that my Lord Maior had notice the ceremony was not adjusted and was desired to stay away.
3. Most of the persons who are now sommoned are perfectly innocent, knew nothing of the matter before it begun, did little or nothing in it when it was begun, and are onely guilty of not taking part against a collegiat society into which they stand so lately admitted.
4. All of them do most humbly cast themselves at his Ma^{ties} feet and pray they may not be lookt on as contemners of his authority in defence of which they are ready to sacrifice their lives.

APPENDIX NO. III.

Inner Temple Muniments.

28 Charles II., A.D. 1675-6, Feb. 29. Indenture made between Francis, Lord Hawley, Sir Charles Harbord, knt., his Majesty's surveyor general, Sir William Haward of Tannridge in the county of Surrey, knt., Sir John Talbott of Lacock in the county of Wilts, knt., and William Harbord of Grafton Park in the county of Northampton, esq., surviving trustees for the sale of fee farm rents and other rents, of the first part, John Lindsay of London, goldsmith, of the second part, and the hon. Daniel Finch, Heneage Finch, and William Finch, esquires, sons of Heneage, Lord Finch, baron of Daventry and lord high chancellor of England, of the third part, Reciting that whereas by several Acts of Parliament and Letters Patent divers fee farm and other rents were vested in the said Francis Lord Hawley and others amongst which rents was all that annual or fee farm rent of ten pounds reserved out of all that inn, capital messuage, and building, called the Inner Temple, London, within Temple Bar, granted by Letters Patent of 13 August, 6 James I, to Sir Julius Cæsar and others under the said yearly rent of ten pounds. And whereas the said rent of ten pounds was amongst other things settled in the King's consort Queen Katherine for life as parcel of her jointure, and whereas John Lindsay had contracted for the purchase of the said rent, but in consideration of the sum of four score pounds, paid by the said Daniel Finch, Heneage Finch, and William Finch out of the treasury of the Inner Temple has directed the said trustees to convey the said rent to the said Daniel Finch, Heneage Finch, and William Finch. The indenture witnesses that the said Francis, Lord Hawley and others of the first part, in consideration of seventy-eight pounds one shilling and eleven pence and by the direction of the said John Lindsay have granted bargained and sold to the said Daniel Finch, Heneage Finch and William Finch and their heirs all the said annual rent or fee farm rent of ten pounds reserved out of the Inner Temple, London, situate and being in the suburbs of the city of London within Temple Bar, and the reversion and remainder of the said rent, to hold the same for ever, provided always that it shall be lawful for the Queen, her officers, and assigns, during the term of her life, to receive the said rent as beneficially as she might have done before the making of these presents.

APPENDIX NO. IV.

INNER TEMPLE GRACE BOOK.

We find by the table of contents, that this volume formerly contained, amongst other things, certain graces which are now lost ; there are, however, two graces, inserted in a later hand, to which reference is made later on. The folios of this book are of parchment ; many of them are now missing, and some of those that remain are stained with galls and other liquids and are rubbed, probably from constant use in the hall. Unfortunately in the process of the numerous rebindings which the work has undergone, the margins have been cut down so that the MS. has been in places destroyed. It is in the writing of two hands, both probably of about 1505, the date of the death of John Nethersole, in memory of whom the book, according to a note hereafter referred to, was provided. The earlier part, containing introductory explanations of the tables and kalendars which follow, judging from the English used, was probably copied from an earlier MS. The handwriting of this portion is regular and good, in the rest of the book it is ordinary. In the introductory explanations there is one four line initial letter in dark blue, with good penwork in red, and with a penwork ornament in red and blue running down the left hand side of the page. There are four two-line initial letters in blue with penwork in red. The letters KL., for Kalendæ for each month in the kalendar, are in blue with red penwork, all of them being of the same design.

such entries as are now entirely missing an asterisk has been placed :¹

The tables and kalendar remaining are curious and interesting, and are as follows: (1) A table showing how to distinguish between the "Angrym" or Arabic and Latin or Roman numerals. (2) A table to find the Sunday Letter and movable feasts. (3) A kalendar giving in columns the day of the month, the time of dawn, the time of sunrise, the signs of the Zodiac, the meridian, the Roman kalendar, the saints days apparently according to the Sarum use, conjunctions of the planets, the phases of the moon, sunset, and time that twilight ends. (4, 5, and 6) Certain astronomical tables. Below the kalendar for the months are some curious rhymes in Latin, which are as follows:

JANUARIUS

In Jano claris calidis que cibus pociaris
Atque decens potus post fercula sit tibi notus
Ledit enim medo tunc potus uti bene credo
Balnea tute intres et venam scindere cures

FEBRUARIUS

Nascitur occulta febris Februario multa
Potibus et escis si caute imunere velis
Tunc cave frigora de pollice funde cruorem
Suge mellis favum pectoris qui morbos curabit

 Que nociva vita tua sint preciosa dicta
 Balnea cum venere tunc nullum constat habere Pocio sit sana atque minutio bona

DECEMBR.

Sane sunt membris res calide mense Decembris
 Frigus vitetur capitalis vena scindatur
 Locio sit vana sed vasis potacio cara

After the kalendar and tables is the following note in the handwriting of Joshua Blew, butler of the Inner Temple during the early part of the eighteenth century :

“ Provided that on festival dayes whenne it shall happen the mayster of the Temple to be present that then the Grace to be referred to his seying.

“ And if the Grace Book be not sett on the borde that then the botelers to forfeit every oon of them a penny to be paid incontinent to hym being present that shulde say grace whereof 1d. shall be geven to a poor man to pray for the soule of the seyde John Nether-sole, etc.

On a slip of paper pasted into the book are two graces in the same hand. They are here given as spelt by Blew.

“ Gloria Patri et Filio et Spiritui Sancto.
